Great Summer Wine Values From Argentina & Chile!

Our Newest Smash Hit From Argentina!

Miguel Mendoza Malbec Reserva "MMM" 2003

"In 2005 we gave Enrique Foster a challenge: to find what he would consider to be an incredible Malbec as well as a great value for Sherry-Lehmann's clientele. After extensive tastings at his home, we found what we consider to be Argentina's BEST value! MIGUEL MENDOZA MALBEC RESERVA 2003, Estate bottled by Enrique Foster himself! This wine is a hand-harvested, 100% Malbec from old vines planted in 1919 on vineyards located 3,000 feet above sea level.

Taste this new Argentine wine and you'll see why we are so enthusiastic about our newest discovery!"

A Brisk Talk With the Chief Piping Plover at East Hampton Main Beach

By Dan Rattiner

I got down to Main Beach in East Hampton at 5 p.m., at an hour when I knew they would be home. We were going to have it out.

"Are your mom and dad home? I asked.

"My mom is home," the kid said. "I'll get her."

And he skittered off.

That's too bad, I thought. I was hoping to have it out with the kid's dad.

It had been a hot day, but now at 5 it was cooling off. I, however, remained hot.

Mom came over, a frail looking thing, her little chick following behind. Both of them had concerned looks on their faces.

"Where's your husband?" I asked.

"He's gone. Flew the coop. They're all the same."

"Well then, I'll take this up with you," I said. "What the hell do you think you're doing?"

"With what?"

"With making your nest exactly on the spot where the East Hampton fire department sets off the Fourth of July fireworks."

The little one hid behind his mom. He peered out from behind her tail feathers.

"I'm making a nest. The beach belongs to everybody."

"The beach belongs to the PEOPLE. Not everybody and everyTHING."

"I can make my nest here if I want."

"You can make a nest here if you want. Yes, you can. You are an endangered species. You're absolutely right. But you know, come the Fourth of July, this is the ONLY spot that we can use to set up all the fireworks for all the people. The PEOPLE. The AMERICAN people. Get it?"

"I'm not moving."

"Why not? There are twenty-five miles of empty beach. In both directions. You guys did this two years ago. And we had to cancel the GODDAMN fireworks so you could finish your namby pamby nesting. One hundred years of town fireworks, never a problem, and then

358 IS THE MAXIMUM ALLOWED IN THE OCEAN

By Dan Rattiner

If you go down to the beach pavilions at any of our local beaches, you know you'll come across all sorts of signs. No Dogs Allowed. No Camp Fires. Beach Closes at 5 p.m. No Alcoholic Beverages. No Parking Without a Permit. No Bathing When Lifeguard Not on Duty.

About the most difficult thing to understand, until now, have been the flags. They are up on poles by the lifeguard stand. White means bathing is good. Blue means bathing is risky. Red means no bathing.

Now there is a new sign, put up at all beaches in the Hamptons leading directly down to the water and nailed behind the lifeguard stands. At two feet by three, it is the most conspicuous sign on the beach. It is painted white with big red letters. You read it — you have to read it — as you walk from your car in the parking lot toward the surf.

CAPACITY

I asked one of the lifeguards at Cooper's Beach in Southampton what all this means.

"We have to count the bathers," he said. "It's the stupidest thing I have ever seen. When it gets to three hundred and fifty-eight bathers, we are supposed to whistle them in."

What I came to learn was that this sign was mandated by Suffolk County. It's at all the beaches for the first time this year. Apparently, the Suffolk County Board of Health has been asked by the Suffolk County Liability Lawyers for their advice on the number of bathers that can be at the beach. There was a lawsuit. Somebody won some money for something having to do with a bathing beach. So now they passed an ordinance. And there are these signs.

I have two issues with the signs. The first has to do with the meaning of the signs. I am a real there's this one year where you move in, and suddenly, there were no Fourth of July fireworks. Over five thousand people and no fireworks."

"We did send you a thank you note."

"Yeah. By carrier pigeon. And so we held the fireworks on the Saturday of Labor Day Weekend. We had bought $10,000 worth of fireworks over the winter. We had to do something. And you know what? Practically nobody came. Nobody could figure it out. It wasn't the Fourth of July. So we just fired them off. Zero. Nada."

"This is not my fault."

"It is your fault."

"The guys knock us up in March in South Carolina. We fly here. We need to be here for five months. We sit, the little ones hatch, we nurse them and help them along. That's the time it takes. I can't help it if your founding fathers decided on this particular day in July to found your country. Why didn't you found it in August? We are done and gone by then."

"We couldn't have predicted you would be an endangered species."

"And who endangered us? Who?"

"I don't want to go there."

"Yes, you do."

"Well, it's survival of the fittest. It's evolution."

"It's the industrial revolution. It's carbon-based industries. It's guns and shooting at us. It's billions and billions of you. It's global warming. You're an infestation. We're endangered. And you want us to move?"

"Yeah. Just down the beach. Maybe five hundred yards. That way, to the east. But before you get to the cabanas at the Maidstone Club. You'll do just fine."

"For one thing, I can't just pick up and move. Some of the chicks are babies running around. Others haven't hatched. I have no help. I don't even have arms. I have WINGS."

"I could help you."

"You'll scare everybody to death. Don't come near my babies."

"I would be very gentle."

"No."

"We just need you out by July 1. That's only two weeks before you would ordinarily leave. What if I sit on your eggs with you? We could divide things up. Get them hatched in half the time."

"You've got to be kidding."

"It would work. Hurry you along."

"No."

"What if I come around here some night and just kick you and all your kids off? What do you think of that?"

"Are you threatening me? Are you seriously threatening me? This is harassment. I'm going to call the police."

"Don't do that."

"Do you know what they will do to you for interfering with an endangered species like me? You will spend ten years in prison. They'll lock you up and throw away the key. You'll never work in this town again."

"All right, all right."

Mama held up one wing and pointed it at the back of the beach.

"Now get out of here and don't come back. You want me to move my family out of here so you can shoot off some fireworks? You're such a big man, aren't you?"

"All right, all right."

"Now."

"Okay. I'm going."

And so I left the beach and walked back to the car. As I was getting in, she threw me this zinger from the other side of the dune.

"What's the matter with you PEOPLE?" she said.

I need a drink. •

Adelaide de Menil and Ted Carpenter's $100 Million Life in Progress

By Dan Rattiner

When our children grow up and leave home to get on with their lives, it does leave a certain emptiness in the house. The basketball hoop out back has grown silent. The long slide the kids would jump on to splash down into the pool screaming and laughing hasn't had anybody on it in quite some time. The bedrooms are empty. What are parents supposed to do about all that?

In many ways, it's a sad time. But eventually, the parents left behind come to the conclusion that the page has to be turned and a new chapter begun. Also, perhaps, there is a certain amount of summing up to be done. What did all this mean? Did it turn out all right?

As I write this, I am thinking of a woman I don't really know all that well — Adelaide de Menil — a photographer and oil heiress living in East Hampton whom I have met maybe six times over a span of thirty years. It may be somewhat presumptuous of me to be writing about her here, but she is who has come to mind. I think Adelaide de Menil's life has been a work of art. I don't know if I could say that about anybody else I know. And it continues to be a work of art.

In 1973, I met Adelaide de Menil out on the Montauk Highway in East Hampton in front of the post office photographing a house that was being slowly towed down the highway. It was her house. And she stood by the side of the highway with a movie camera on a tripod with the shutter set to take one frame every few seconds. Play it at high speed and the house, which would take much of the afternoon to go by, would seem to be going by at maybe fifteen miles an hour.

The occasion for all of this was the purchase by Ms. de Menil of this old, seventeenth-century colonial saltbox home known as the Purple House from next door to the East Hampton Library for the purpose of moving it four miles down the road to the 40 acres of oceanfront

THERE'S NOTHING LIKE A FRESH BAGEL AT 4 A.M.

By Dan Rattiner

At four o'clock on Wednesday morning, I said my goodbyes, gathered together my things at our offices in Bridgehampton and walked out the front door through the darkness to my car. I would be heading home to Three Mile Harbor.

Thirty-five of us had just worked eighteen hours straight to get the 300-page Memorial Day edition of Dan's Papers ready to go to the printer. A few stragglers in production and art remained to wind things up. But everything else was done.

I drove silently eastward and then turned onto Main Street in East Hampton. The first rays of dawn were brightening the horizon.

In the semi-darkness, only an occasional delivery truck went by. There was no other traffic.

And it occurred to me that after I turned onto North Main Street and under the railroad bridge, I would pass Hampton Bagels. It opens at 4 am. They would be preparing the first bagels of the day.

When I got there, I parked between two trucks out front and walked inside. Flourescent lights brightly lit the place. There were deliverymen hauling bags in and out, there was the smell of steam and flour, bread and spices. Three men in white aprons were working behind the counter at the ovens with giant wooden paddles, quickly collecting the bagels as they appeared on trays at the open oven doors to dump them into large wire baskets. Nearby were huge paper bags, their tops folded back so they could stand on the floor open five feet high and other men would put twenty hot poppy bagels or ten onion or forty plain or whatever else was on the order into them. The morning wholesale deliveries were being property on Further Lane she and her husband Ed Carpenter had just bought.

Property on Further Lane was relatively expensive then, though surely not as expensive as it is today. It was grand space, with the sound of the surf and the sea and the smells of salt sea air and the views of vast potato farms and occasional fogs rolling across the landscape. It was a place for the wealthy to build vast estates. But that is not what Ms. de Menil and Mr. Carpenter wanted to do. They wanted to live in the Purple House and perhaps assemble a grouping of 300-year-old homes elsewhere on the property. They'd have horses in the barn, an artists' studio, a garden house and a pool house.

And so that is what they did. All together, they moved twelve buildings to their property by having house movers pick them up and take them there. Many local people complained that the Carpenters were going to do harm to these local treasures, or at the very least take them out from public view. But in the early 1970s when all this took place, saving historic places was not the priority it is today. The complaints died away.

For the next thirty years, she and her husband lived there and enjoyed their family and friends there. I'd see them occasionally, at one party or another. We'd say hello, but that was about all. I was not among their circle of friends. Indeed, as a local newspaper publisher, there was probably a need to keep me at arm's length for another reason — who knows what I might write?

In 2005, this couple began to consider downsizing. Forty acres is a lot of space.

At about that time, a man named Ron Baron bought about twelve acres of property next door and told them if they ever wanted to sell, they should contact him. Properties like that of the de Menils, along that four-mile row of mansions on the ocean on Further Lane, were coming on the market in the $25 million range. Baron said he'd pay that and more. And the reason was that the carpenter parcel was about twice the size of any other along that stretch. It was something to think about.

What the Carpenters thought was that they had all these historic old buildings on their property — these were the only structures there — and if they did sell the property, what would happen to them? The topic never came up directly, but Mr. Baron, as he hinted he might pay as much as $50 million for the property, said that of course he would want to make his own mark on the property. And he wasn't interested in history.

The couple certainly did not need the money. But perhaps, they thought, their time there was at an end. Would there be ANYBODY who would care for these historic buildings?

In late 2006, the couple got the idea that they should donate these buildings back to the community. For thirty years they had kept them in perfect, historic condition. Maybe they did belong back in public view.

The first house that they offered up was the very first house that they had brought to Further Lane – the Purple House. They contacted the East Hampton Library. And to their shock, the Library board, with numerous board members dissenting, voted not to take it.

At this point, a Swedish industrialist named Robert Weil made an offer on this property for more than Baron had offered. Baron offered higher. And then there was another offer higher than those of either Baron or Weil. The couple thought that there might be an awful lot of good they could do with what appeared to be as much as $80 million.

This newspaper got wind of these offers last year and I did write about them. But Adelaide called me up to scold me and she told me there were offers but she hadn't yet decided to accept any of them and I shouldn't be writing about what I don't know about. But yes, they would be returning the historically priceless buildings to the community.

What I didn't know at the time, but others did, was that the bidding on this property was now approaching $100 million and none of the bidders wanted anything on the property but the land, free and clear of the buildings. The buildings would HAVE to be off the property. Probably within a year. You know, there are unknowns to be contended with in our lives on this planet. Who is rich one day could be poor the next. The economy could crash. The offers could be withdrawn. And yes, now it was an urgent matter to get these buildings off the property.

Among those who did know what was going on — besides the real estate brokers who were Greenland, as seen from the east.

The Green of Greenland

The Ice Melts, an Island Appears. The Locals Call It Warming Island.

By Dan Rattiner

There is little doubt that I, from my living room, have one of the most spectacular views in the Hamptons. It looks out over Three Mile Harbor, past the boats tied up in their slips to a sunset over the far shore. And it is safe from the effects of global warming. Or at least until today I have thought it was. The house is on the side of a hill seventeen feet above sea level. And though, as the crow flies, the front of my house is seventy-one feet from the water, the formidable presence of Three Mile Harbor Road passes between us. It would take quite a blow for Three Mile Harbor to rise up seventeen feet, cross the road and cause damage to my house and the others like it here on our grand hillside.

But then, today, I read about the changes going on in Greenland. Up until now, I have always felt sorry for this island. When the Vikings discovered it up there in the north country above Canada, they named it Greenland as some kind of joke. It is, in actual size, the biggest joke on the planet. Bigger than the United States, Greenland is probably visible from Venus and Mars. And unlike the United States or almost anywhere else on earth, there is nothing green about it. It's covered with ice and snow. Greenland? What a joke. Ha.

The changes that Greenland is going through consist of a great unveiling. The ice is cracking and breaking away, with explorers who set foot on that island reporting the sound of it cracking and rumbling and another big one-acre-sized chunk breaking off and sliding into the sea about once an hour.

And guess what? Underneath all that ice, it's green! Or, within a year or two as the moss appears and other things grow, it will be green. There was a report in the papers last week that what was believed to have been a peninsula sticking out from Greenland to the west, is, in fact, with the ice now all away, an island.

ANTOINETTE JONGEN: HOW SHE NEARLY DIED, BUT DIDN'T

By David Lion Rattiner

Antoinette Jongen, an 80-year-old Springs resident, was enjoying her daily walk when she arrived at the bulkhead at the Three Mile Harbor inlet. The sun was shining, the air was fresh and pure and she was feeling connected to nature and to her own life. This is what life is all about for Antoinette, who allowed memories of her life as a shipping manager in Holland when she was a young woman to run through her mind as she walked. She laughed to herself when she remembered the way the men looked at her oddly back then for being a working woman at that time.

She inhaled a deep breath of summer and looked out at the sea.

"What a world," she said. She watched a sailboat under full wind a few miles out, looking clear as day to her weathered eyes.

She took another step towards the bulkhead and saw a ledge that she wanted to climb up onto. Antoinette was the type of woman who liked to take the road less traveled. She took a step.

But suddenly, she lost her balance. Gravity begin to pull her towards the edge, where a strong current of running water sped below. It was going to happen and, as she does with everything she does, she let go and just splashed mightily into the cold water.

She did not panic. She was dressed warmly, so that would be fine, but then she began to notice the saltwater seep through her clothes and settle on her skin. She reached out for a piling. The current began to take her out to the sound. And with that, she turned and watched as her fate of being swept out to the open sea became her new reality. Would she die? Would she HAVE to die?

Using a burst of strength, she reached out again at the piling and this time, her strong

Not a big island, mind you. A small island, like Gardiner's Island. And so they have named it. On future maps, it will be indicated as Warming Island, the new island off the coast of Greenland.

Personally, I have tried to take a cheery view of global warming as it comes down the pike. We will be having balmy winters in the Hamptons. Flowers will bloom. We will soon sprout palm trees. We'll have winters filled with flamingos and butterflies. Maybe we will have steel drum concerts. And surely, as those poor states down south suffer in unbearable summer heat, we'll have a mass migration of people moving north to the Hamptons and we will prosper as never before.

On the wall in my living room, I have a special clock that tells me when the tide is high or low. There is a particular spit of land that juts out from just beyond Gardiner's Marina that gives me a good measurement of how bad, if at all, things get. At high tide, much of this spit of land has always been slightly underwater as wetlands. At low tide, the spit of land is dry and you can walk out there, which I have done from time to time. I've lived looking out at this and marking the spot for thirty years. So far, so good. I see no change.

But what they tell me about Greenland is that as it gets back at us for giving it a name that is a thigh-slapper, the ice, like some sort of gift wrapping, falls away and it floats off into the sea, and slowly drifts south and melts. And the sea levels rise.

"In calculating the effects of global warming," one scientist said, "nobody expected that the ice cap covering Greenland would melt at this time. It was thought it would hold out until mid-century. But here it goes."

Instead of the sea levels rising by one inch in the next half a century, the sea levels will — because of Greenland — will, well, the results are not in. But it can be said with certainty that when the entire 630,000 cubic mile gift wrap ice melt falls away into the sea, the sea levels around the world will rise twenty feet.

So what I figure, always trying to look at the cheery side of global warming, is that all this wonderfully pure ancient water will be so refreshing and good for you that we can bottle it and sell it, except you might have to look out for an occasional woolly mammoth tooth or something. Also, since my house is at seventeen feet up above sea level, I will build me a three-foot tall seawall and that will keep the Harbor out. And I will be WATERFRONT.

People will come by who haven't been here for a while and will be pleasantly surprised.

"Wow! Hey! Waterfront! When did this happen?"

And I'll shrug and say "Greenland. You know."

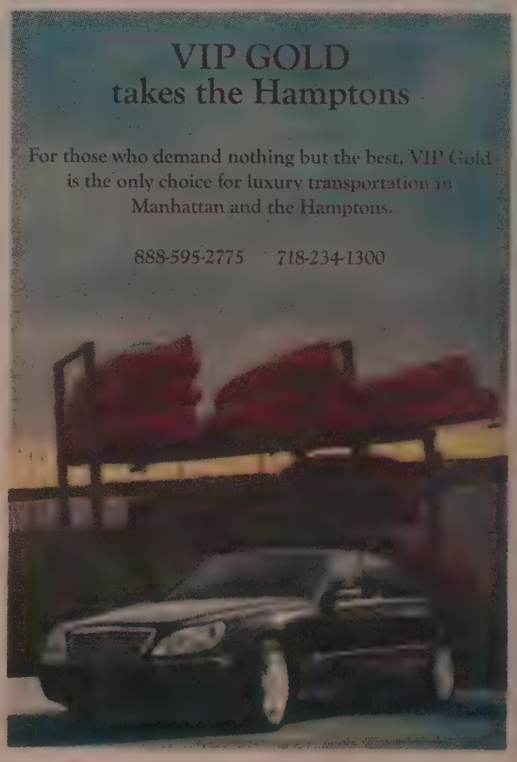

Have you any idea what my property is going to be worth as waterfront? It's worth a lot as it is now. But add waterfront and it staggers the imagination. The sun sets over the harbor across the way, the boats will be tied up in their slips all around, and the road will be at the bottom of the harbor. Is this heaven or what?

Want to come over? Since there'll be no road, you'll come by boat. From where, I don't exactly know. But when you get here, you'll tie up and clamber ashore and we'll have a party. Lots of liquor, canapéés and I'll make those little tiny hamburgers on the grill. Maybe we'll have a steel drum concert.

As for that peninsula I used to keep track of, well, at low tide it will still appear, but as an island. We'll NAME it. We'll have a naming party.

By the way, fifty years from now I will be over a hundred years old. But that's another story. •

Fundraising Concert

Billy Joel, Prince, Dave Matthews, Tom Petty and James Taylor

By David Lion Rattiner

"Which fundraiser are you going to this weekend?"

"The one at the Ross School. And the week after that, and the week after that."

This is the conversation that has the planners of all other Hamptons fundraisers worried. For five consecutive Saturday nights this summer, The Ross School will be hosting some of the most amazing international performers, all in the name of charity, raising money so needy kids can go to the Ross School. Some tickets are going for $15,000 so that a partier can attend all five concerts. Beginning July 14, the benefit concert series will include Prince, Billy Joel, Dave Matthews, Tom Petty and James Taylor. This is going to be unbelievable. I hate to say it, but this is a whole other level of entertainment for this area.

Most summers, if we're lucky, we'll have one concert out here with a performer of this stature, but five, and all in a row? Wow.

And that's what the other fundraiser people are saying. They know that these events are going to be sought after big time. Not just because people care about Ross School scholarships, but also because they really want to go see Billy Joel sing "Down Easter Alexa" in the Hamptons one last time before they die. They want to see how short Prince actually is. They want to see Dave Matthews sing "Crash Into Me" while making out with somebody. These are not charity events to people, these are all out events that are going on in the Hamptons that people really want to go to.

The other fundraisers out there are not concerned about this out of jealousy. It's a matter of business. They think there is a chance that having an event like this will take money away from them. There are a lot of other important charities out here that rely on the good will of the rich. Charities that support research for breast cancer and other cancers are important to support. There is the Heart of The

EXPLORING MAIN ST. IN THE OLDEST TOWN IN N.Y.

By Emily J Weitz

The East End is not only rich with natural splendor and cultural refinement. It is also a place deeply rooted in history. In a world where Panera breads are snatching the identities of local bakeries, we are blessed to live in an area that treats its history with respect. The Shinnecocks trace their ancestors as far back as 8,000 BC in this area and Southampton is the oldest English settlement in New York State, except for Gardiner's Island. The first boat arrived at what became known as Conscience Point carrying eight men, a woman and a little boy in 1640. The crew was aided by Native Americans as they carried their cargo to what is now the village of Southampton, setting up a camp near the ocean. A meeting house was quickly erected on the hill where Southampton Hospital stands today. All of these details are known because of the records that have been kept in Southampton since its founding days.

Even though that original meetinghouse is long gone, there are quite a few buildings in Southampton that have stood the test of time. The Southampton Historical Society continues to fight for the preservation of historically significant buildings, so we don't lose sight of how it all began.

The Halsey House is one building that stands as a testament to the town's history. Located at 249 Main Street, this house was built when Main Street was first constructed. Thomas Halsey was among the first English settlers to trade with the Shinnecocks in 1640 and the house is thought to be one of the oldest English-style homes in New York State. Even though you find it in the heart of a bustling modern town, it is kept as it was. Inside, you can still find textiles and ceramics of the era. The fireplace is surrounded by tools used at that time to keep an open hearth. The grounds are so Hamptons Gala for the American Heart Association on July 7, and also the day before Prince performs is the Under the Stars Benefit for the Children's Museum of the East End. What will these big concerts do to events like this?

Fear not. Our view here at Dan's Papers is that very little will change. We know Hamptons people and we know that when it comes to charity, they don't mess around. We have some of the most giving people out here and they take charity events very seriously. They understand the importance of them, they understand the need for them and they understand the tax benefits they get supporting them.

With that being said, now comes the problem of being in two places at once, or being too tired to go from one charity event to the other.

Well, here at Dan's Papers, we have figured out a solution for you.

We have set up a business right out of this office that will allow you to give your tickets away to people who will attend the event representing you. Each individual has been hand selected by us personally, so you can be sure that you will be represented by the best people. And guess what? You don't even have to pay us a fee for it! That's right, this is service to you that is absolutely free to the person providing the ticket because, believe it or not, the people that we are selecting are actually willing to pay us the small sum of $100 to get the tickets for these events.

The Ross School

We train them to be courteous, we give them a handful of semi-clean jokes to tell at the party and we give them your business cards to hand out at all of the events. We also have developed a special makeup that is also used by politicians, so that when your representative's picture is taken, the photo ends up a being a photograph of you. And don't worry, our employees are going to know how to spell your name, forwards and backwards.

Here at Dan's Papers, we've got you covered.

Let's Go Cruisin'

Turn it On, Wind it Up, Blow it Out — at the Bonacker Car Show

By Daniel Simone

It was a warm, bustling Sunday morning, the first of the Official Hamptons Season. A casual crowd milled about the streets of Amagansett, mostly weekend revelers. The best place to have spent such a thermal, humid day was the beach, of course.

However, in those early morning hours, a particular event was getting ready to unfold in the still drowsy tinsel town, the Annual Bonacker Cruiser Classic Car show.

"The hell with the beach. I wouldn't miss this for the world," declared a portly, handsome gray-haired man. If the one thousand viewers who attended the show attest to its success, then this affair, the seventh annual so far, most probably, will repeat itself infinitely. The classic automobile aficionado typically hosts a fervid passion for these relics, perhaps, because we humans, to some degree, have sentimental inclinations. I once asked a psychiatrist to render an analysis of the motivation that attaches an individual's emotions to the automobiles of yesteryear. She pondered my curious question and soon arrived at a synoptic conclusion. "These vehicles are banks that store and safeguard nostalgic memories of the past — childhood days, early years of marriage, or perhaps, the inception of a new family." In fact, this author's personal experience parallels the doctor's summation.

By eleven o'clock the visitors had escalated to a dense throng. People of all ages strolled through the parked, gleaming exhibits, and a multitude of camera addicts aimed those devices at their favorite automobiles. Thankfully, there was no shortage of food vendors. The aromas of hotdogs and cooking hamburgers permeated the air. "These people love our hotdogs. Every year, no matter how many I bring along, I always run out of them. They keep lining up until we pack up and go home," said the vendor, a jolly type who ended every sentence in a gurgling laugh.

JESSIE STAVOLA FALTERS ON THE MOUND. BUT WINS.

By Justin DeMarco

Jessie Stavola receives the yellow softball from catcher Caity O'Brien. She enters the white chalk circle and takes a few steps behind the rubber. Stavola then paces forward to the center of the mound and digs her two feet into the dirt in front of the rubber. She takes the ball out of her glove and places it in her right hand. She puts her glove over the ball, deciding which of the six grips — curve, screw, change, rise, drop, fastball — from her arsenal she will choose. Decides. Gets into her windmill formation, bends down, brings her right arm around from 12 to 6 and fires.

"You get into this comfortable routine before every pitch," Stavola said. "It's one of those things. You go back, try to learn from your mistakes and move on."

After striking out the first batter in the top of the fourth inning, Stavola got into trouble. She gave up a walk and a single to the next two batters she faced. The fifth-seeded Miller Place Panthers now had a rally going with runners on first and second and one out. With the score deadlocked 0-0, the next batter popped out. Stavola then threw a wild pitch and the runners advanced to second and third. She eventually walked the batter. The bases were now loaded with two outs and Panthers' pitcher, Jackie Doolin, stepping up to the plate trying to help her own cause.

Crack. Doolin connected on the offering from Stavola. The ball was flying high into the sky heading towards left field. East Hampton eighth-grader Megan Hess ran over towards the left field foul line, put her glove up and squeezed the ball for the out. Stavola jumped up in excitement and continued on into the dugout after the final out of the inning.

It was this now involuntary repetition, taught by her pitching coach, that helped

A host of booths sold memorabilia — T-shirts, car models, an assortment of car waxes and related products, and vintage automobile posters. It exuded the characteristics of a mini bazaar.

David Samot, a lifetime East Hampton resident, organized the Bonacker Cruiser Classic Car club seven years ago and, so far, the organization has garnered over one hundred members. (According to David, bonacker is the name of the group of local people who first settled East Hampton). Mr. Samot, a devoted vintage automobile enthusiast, carried a proud and hectic demeanor — he scuttled throughout the site directing his subordinates and answering questions. Numerous viewers were acquainted with him and privileged at that. "Hey Dave, good to see you. Nice turnout today. Good mixture of cars this year. Keep it up, pal," were the compliments of a tall, energetic fan. And indeed, the blend of vehicles charmed everyone. A variety of American Muscle Cars, custom hot rods and a smattering of unique foreign antique autos had comprised the exhibition, approximately two hundred in all.

The gratified owners eagerly exchanged facts and details that pertained to their beloved automobiles, some patiently indulging the viewers as well. "This is a social happenings for us. It's not a contest. There's nothing to win and nothing to loose. We just love to show and talk about our cars," zealously stated Alvin, who displayed a 1969 396 SS Camaro. As he spoke, he continued polishing the red fenders of his darling. Others sat nearby, their vehicles in groups, chatting, eating and beaming with pride.

Mr. Samot had pleasantly surprised this reporter when he had casually made mention of a magnanimous act — he distributes a significant portion of the proceeds generated by the organization to local families who require financial assistance. In addition, every year he sponsors two to four students at the East Hampton High School. Quite commendable, Mr. Samot.

A radio broadcast enhanced the atmosphere of the occasion. The station WLNG 92.1 transmitted live from the site. The disc jockey, Brian Bannon, a courteous and spirited man, cozily sat in a bus that had an array of broadcasting apparatus inside. In between songs, Brian relayed the ambiance and facts of the affair to the mass radio listeners in a vigorous tone while an assistant, Dana Kallio, randomly interviewed some of the exhibitors in the field, whose conversations Brian put on the air.

The entry fee was five dollars and the cost to register a vehicle in the show, twenty dollars. Reasonable! Local businesses sponsored the event, thereby increasing the revenues. "Each year, we pick up more and more steam," touted the charitable David Somat.

By the late afternoon, everyone seemed sun-drugged — the viewers drifted about slowly as they welcomed a passing cloud that provided a few minutes of shade. The automobile owners were now tired of talking and polishing. One even dozed as he sat in his blue, foldable chair. Several cars roared to life and their owners drove away, while a group of middle-aged women reverted to discussing family matters. At the 7th Annual Bonacker Cruiser Classic Car Show was disbanding, everyone appeared satisfied and already looking to next year.

Five of the six at mile one

By Dan Rattiner

At seven a.m. last Sunday morning in the Hamptons, almost a thousand people got up, opened a window, took a deep breath and declared that this was an absolutely perfect day for the Dan's Papers Potatohampton 5k run. Then they got dressed to run, or waited while a significant other or friend dressed for the run, and then headed over toward the monument in the center of downtown Bridgehampton.

It was indeed a perfect day. It was partly cloudy, 63 degrees and humid. It was a day when, if we had had an Olympic class runner on the road, which we didn't, records might have been set. This running of the Potatohampton, our 29th, was to be contested by a combination of summer homeowners and locals. The time posted for the win, 16 minutes and 31 seconds, was described afterwards by the man who achieved it as "respectable" for this distance. It was a wonderful way to start the morning and a simply wonderful introduction to summer in the Hamptons. The leafy trees arched over the narrow roads. The lawns were lush and green. The gardens were bursting with flowers and the potato fields were plowed and ready for planting.

All the profits from this event would benefited the Bridgehampton Child Care and Recreational Center on the Bridgehampton-Sag Harbor Turnpike.

In 1778, the young men in the Hamptons, forming into the Bridgehampton militia, mustered in a park on Ocean Road just south of where the monument is today in the center of town. And so it was in that park that we set up our registration tables, our trophy table and our home base water station under some tents to welcome the runners.

Personally, I arrived from East Hampton in an old English sports car that I bought in 1964 for $800 from a guy named Charlie Brown who owned C. B.'s Bar in Hampton Bays. I've owned it and kept it up ever since. I would be the lead car in this race. And to get it looking that way, my girlfriend Chris and I scrubbed her up and down with soapy water before we left home.

It's ten tough miles for a deep red 1959 Triumph TR-3 from my home to downtown Bridgehampton. But I held it steady and the oil pressure hovered around 20 pounds and the engine temperature stayed in the 360 degree range. So she was fine. I arrived early to give the old girl a rest before race time. And then I brought her out front of the runners as they lined up — about twice as many as last year — and we waited for the gun to go off, at which time, I hoped, I would shift into first gear and she would not stall out.

Blam!

We led the runners south on Ocean Road for about a mile, then west on Paul's Lane toward Halsey. Six runners had quickly separated from the front of the pack within the first half mile, but by the time they passed the two mile mark and the water station manned by volunteers from the Child Care Center, four of the six had fallen away and now there were just two, side by side, in the lead, running easily. They stayed that way, side by side, all the way up Halsey to Hildreth Lane and took another left, and then a turn right onto Ocean Road, heading for home.

And they were talking to one another.

"This is not very competitive," I said to photographer Kimberly Goff, who I had invited to sit in the cockpit next to me. "I hope they make a big run for it at the end. It could get exciting."

"I think they know each other," Kimberly said. We could not hear what they were saying. But she said they were all friendly and laughing together.

"Damn," I said. "They're gonna cross the finish line together."

Well, they didn't. In the last step or two, one of them, 36-year-old Mike Guastolla of Manhattan, leaned forward for the win. Mike Lyons, 35 and also of Manhattan, was clocked one second later.

As the rest of the runners now began to come across the line — 12-year-old kids, teenagers, young men and women, older men and women, disabled men and women, women pushing baby strollers etc. — I got out of the car and walked over to talk to the sweaty, breathless winner.

"What were you guys talking about?" I asked.

"We talked about the beautiful day."

"Do you know each other?"

"We're both members of the Warren Street racing club."

"Did you consider crossing the finish line together?"

"We did. But in the end, he said, 'Your young daughter is here. You cross first.' And so I did."

Mike Guastella lives on the Upper East Side and works for a private equity firm on Wall Street. And here's a surprise. He vacations at his parents house in Yaphank and came out for the run. He and Mike Lyons have been friends since they were classmates at the University of Pennsylvania, where Guastella ran the 800 and Lyons was a 10k champ. And there were half a dozen other members of the Warren Street club who also came out to run.

Thomas Heinz of East Marion finished third, nearly 35 seconds behind the two Mikes. Fourth to finish was Edward Stern of Manhattan, who's time was 17:12. Stern has been a longtime runner of the race. He's the son of Leonard Stern, the developer of the Meadowlands and the Hartz Mountain company. Ed also worked at Dan's Papers one summer.

The first woman finisher was Tara Farrell, 28, of Quogue — her time was 18:30.

The Dan's Papers Potatohampton 5K has been run every year for the past 29 years. It is the oldest running race on Long Island and was founded at a time that the New York Marathon was just a couple of hundred people running through traffic. The Potatohampton has been an awful lot of fun, kicking off the season in the Hamptons every year on Memorial Day Sunday. And it's had its hilarious moments. One year, two people ran the race dressed as French Fried potatoes. Another time, my trusty sports car took us off on a wrong turn as I was yaking away with my photographer and I almost had a heart attack leading this long line of runners, pied piper fashion, on a road that went who knew where? Somehow, we recovered and made a second but deliberate wrong turn to get us back and it has been known ever since, somewhat affectionately looking back on it, as something to remind me of just before the start of every race. The runners have run this race through rainstorms, floods, heatwaves, hurricanes and even over a damaged and weakened bridge across Mecox Bay that was closed to vehicular traffic but was still something the runners had to cross. I had to promise the police that we would post somebody down there at the entrance to the bridge to make sure the runners did not cross it in lockstep, the stress of which might have collapsed it. As we were benefiting the Stony Brook University Hospital Psychiatric Wing at that time, the person who got appointed to check the runners entering the bridge was a Neurosurgeon from that facility, something I thought appropriate. He wore a beeper. Nobody called. The bridge survived.

This year we had no such hilarity. Indeed, if anything, this was the most smoothly run event in the history of the race. My hat is off to Joan Gray of Dan's Papers, who pulled the whole thing together and was there to see that it all happened. I'd also like to thank the Southampton Town Police, without who's cooperation this would have never happened, the Bridgehampton Ambulance Corps, our army of volunteers from all over and the Town of Southampton Recreation Department. Refreshments were supplied by King Kullen of Bridgehampton, Bob's Village Market of Bridgehampton and by Hampton Mortgage Co. I'd also like to thank the thousand people who came, 600 of whom came to watch 400 run. I'd also like to thank our other sponsors, Hildreth's Home Goods, Bridgehampton National Bank, Southampton Inn, ABCO Electric Corp, AFL Web Printing and Pulver Gas and our volunteers, Lally Mockler, Margaret Rice, Carol White, Blossom and Martin Gluck, Sylvia Fridle and her son and daughter, Claudia Pilato, Marie McAlary, Sarah Quinn, Robin Holtz, Yi Lu, Matt Cross, Justin deMarco and Mike Villensky. The results of the race, giving the times of all the runners, is posted on the front door of the Dan's Papers offices at 2221 Montauk Highway and will remain there through the middle of next week. See you next year.

Kim Cattrall
Actress, Author

By Sabrina C. Mashburn

After 32 years in front of the camera, Kim Cattrall has become the embodiment of the image of a modern New York sophisticate. Her statuesque figure can be seen striding down Madison Avenue on any given day, clad in exquisitely tailored clothes and turning heads left and right. Luckily, Kim does not spend all her time in New York City and instead chooses to reside at her house on Gerard Drive in East Hampton whenever she needs a well-deserved rest from her packed schedule of awards ceremonies, book signings and filming for movies and television.

Kim Cattrall has not always been the natural New Yorker every fan of her character, Samantha, on HBO's "Sex and The City" admires and strives to emulate. Born in Liverpool, England, best known as the birthplace of the Beatles, Cattrall's family moved to Vancouver, Canada when she was only three months old. When she turned eleven, Kim Cattrall returned to England to study acting at the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art. A brilliant pupil, Cattrall graduated high school at the age of sixteen with a full scholarship to the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York City. It was there that Kim began to craft her sleek New York persona, which helped her land her first role in a feature film during her senior year. The film, Otto Preminger's Rosebud, received mixed reviews but gave the young actress the opportunity to work with not only one of the United States' premier directors, but also to star opposite A-list actor Peter O'Toole. Like most freshly-minted actresses, Kim craved the tangibility and excitement of live theatre and she soon headed back to Vancouver, later joining a repertory theater in Toronto. During this time, the possibilities of a career in film were still tempting the talented young actress and when she won a contract with Universal Studios in Los Angeles, she left the theatre to pursue her dream of becoming a star. This was one of the last contracts ever given to an actress, which allowed Kim Cattrall the opportunity to build her career following the path of the stars of Hollywood's Golden Age. She began by taking small roles and acted her way up, working diligently and thus ensuring her longevity as an actress.

Due to her multinational upbringing, Kim Cattrall has an international appeal unmatched by most actresses. She is fluent in German and has received accolades from rock stars, such as in the song "Ode to Kim Cattrall" by Crow T. Robot, and British Glamour, who presented her with a Glammy award in 2005 for her performance in the West End play, Whose Life is it Anyway? However, the role that made her a household name across the globe was that of Samantha in HBO's most beloved series, "Sex and The City." Samantha was the perfect vehicle to catapult Kim to superstardom, as the character was very similar to the actress in some ways, yet outlandish enough to encourage a cult following. Like Cattrall herself, Samantha is a savvy businesswoman who takes her sexuality seriously and is the object of every man — and woman's — desire the moment they lay eyes on her, no matter what their age or preference. Cattrall's Samantha also had depth, as she was the eldest of the four friends on the show and served as a voice of reason and stability when her younger friends needed guidance. Unlike Cattrall, however, Samantha would never commit to a serious relationship, making her dating antics more fun to watch than any others on the show.

Capitalizing on her reputation as a successful, independant sex goddess, Kim Cattrall published her first book, Satisfaction: The Art of the Female Orgasm, in 2003 with the help of her husband at the time, Mark Levinson. Although Cattrall's character on "Sex and The City" never had problems in bed, Cattrall admits to not enjoying her sex life fully until she turned forty. The actress wrote the guide in order to share her suggestions for women who want to enjoy themselves and please their partners. The slim, stylish volume was a smashing success and proved to the world that Kim Cattrall had many more talents up her sleeve than her fans ever thought possible. Two years later, in 2006, Cattrall published her second book, Kim Cattrall: Sexual Intelligence. A gorgeous collection of sensual pictures and complementary text, the actress' first attempt at piecing together a compilation of diverse works was also very well received, being touted as "the sexiest coffee table book ever created" by the reviewers at www.Amazon.com. The book explores why women want certain things both inside and outside of the bedroom and how to find out what it is that you want. Recognizing that many of her female fans are too young to keep such a sexy manuscript out on their bedside table, Kim's book, Being a Girl: Navigating the Ups and Downs of Teen Life, gave her the fingers found a grip. She hung on, with the current pushing against her and maneuvered her legs around the piling as well. Her instincts left her and her logic began to come into focus. She looked at her hand — it was bleeding from hanging on. She looked across the way at the beach on the other side, but knew for sure that the current would sweep her out before she could make it across. She looked for areas where she could climb, but nothing made sense. And then the cold began to set in.

Suddenly, she saw a motorboat in the distance, just about to pass Maidstone Beach. She was only in the water for five minutes now and her rescue was here. Antoinette called out as it came close but it drove right by, nobody inside noticing her. As a result, she was suddenly demoralized. She'd hang on for as long as she could. She was not going to let herself die here so easily.

For thirty minutes, Antoinette sat in the water, clinging onto the piling to save her own life as she watched two other motorboats drive by. "Please help! I'm over here! Help! Help!" She screamed, but they didn't hear her.

She thought of her family and she began to think about how drowning was a nice way to die. She thought about how lucky she was to be able to die in as beautiful place as Three Mile Harbor inlet, a place she truly loves. Her arms were growing tired and her legs were losing their grip as she hugged the piling.

Three Mile Harbor Inlet

And then, a fourth boat came by. It was a much smaller boat and, this time, it was coming closer to her.

Captain Ryan Persan had been heading out to the open sea on a test run. The strapping 27-year-old mechanic was checking to see if the fixes he had just made on the small vessel he was navigating had put it in good working order. His polarized sunglasses gave him a clear view of the water.

And now, he noticed something odd at the piling. A small head appeared for a second and then disappeared behind a wave. "What was that?" he thought. He looked again and there she was, a woman clinging on for dear life. He could see her mouthing out words, she was definitely saying, "help."

Jumping quickly to action, he sped over on his boat, expertly controlling it so that he did not hit the woman or the pilings. He saw Antoinette's eyes and told her to reach out her arm. He leaned over the side of the boat and pulled her out of the water. Her face was blue with cold. "You're going to be all right," Ryan said as a mop of soaked clothing squished onto the deck of his boat.

Antoinette looked up at the sky. Ryan was right. She was going to be all right.

Later, Antoinette was at Southampton Hospital being treated for minor cuts and for having water in her lungs. She was released in stable condition. There was just a little tickle in her chest from the water, but she felt fine and she smiled. She stepped outside and breathed in the Southampton air. She had one heck of a story to tell and now says that she likes being one of the few people to ever have breathed in the sea and lived to tell about it.

chance to share all of the life lessons she has picked up while being a beautiful, smart, successful woman with her teenage fans.

Kim Cattrall's concern for other women, both young and old, does not begin and end with her performances and publications. As an advocate for senior citizens, Cattrall has shown the world her most compassionate, generous side. She always seems to be at the forefront of charity events and auctions, sometimes giving the clothes off her back — or images of herself without any clothes at all — in the name of helping others, from animals and children to women of all ages who are in need of her assistance and support.

It seems natural that a New Yorker as successful and charitable as Kim Cattrall would find her way to the Hamptons, where the residents are known for their style and success as well as their charitable spirit. It is in East Hampton that the busy actress can take time for herself, to write her next bestseller, take a walk on the beach, or lend a hand to one of her favorite charities. As smart and caring as she is beautiful, Kim Cattrall is truly one of the most intriguing and attractive residents of the Hamptons. So if you see a statuesque blonde strolling down Main Street in East Hampton this summer, don't be surprised if you hear that beguiling Samantha giggle as you walk past to catch a glimpse of one of the Hamptons' brightest stars.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion Rattiner

Good Looking People

I was walking around the towns all weekend, hitting up different restaurants, clubs and beaches and I noticed there were a lot of good-looking people in town.

I mean, seriously, like, are you kidding me?

I was on Main Street in East Hampton doing pretty much nothing except saying "hello" to pals that work as managers at these clothing stores that I can't afford to shop at (shout out to locals), when I just looked around and it hit me. Dear God, did it hit me like a ton of bricks. Two girls, one blonde and one brunette, drove by in a Ferrari, followed by a Polo-ed up blonde in a BMW convertible. As I stared in despicable amazement, I bumped into a mom that can only be described as a word that I'm not allowed to say in this newspaper (milf, there, I said it).

"Excuse me," I said, as I just looked this woman up and down.

Then out of Polo walks what looked to me like a young President of the United States. "Come on, honey," he said in a British accent.

I'm loving all these accents out here. There are so many European people visiting this year because the Euro is strong against the dollar and it is just bringing an unsurpassed sexiness to this area. I was at a party that had mostly European people there and the accents just make you think about sex.

I'm having hot people overload. It's almost as if every person in town was cast by a porn director. Seriously, it's almost like everybody out here is playing some kind of role in a movie. Everybody has a genuine look to them, but at the same time, you can't really stop thinking about sex. Or, maybe — it is just me? Hopefully, it's not, or else this will be one very embarrassing column.

I don't know what the hell just happened, but this summer is the summer of amazing — and by amazing, I mean insanely hot-people. There is really no other way to describe this situation. Everybody here this summer has a style that just works. If you are reading this, you are one of these people. It doesn't matter what age you are, for whatever reason, maybe it's the food out here this summer, you are hot. The Hamptons is just doing it to you. Go you.

On figuring this out, I decided that the only thing left to do was to celebrate how sexy everybody in town was by having a beer or two that night. I headed out to Whitehouse nightclub with some great friends, including Pentagon John, and let loose. Guess what? There were hot people everywhere there as well, and Fergie from The Black Eyed Peas looked ridiculously, amazingly, outrageously hot.

I'm telling you, I've grown up out here and I've never seen anything like this. Maybe it's all the new gyms and personal trainers that are opening up. I mean, even the deli girl is sexy this summer and all of the fishermen in Montauk look like professional baseball players.

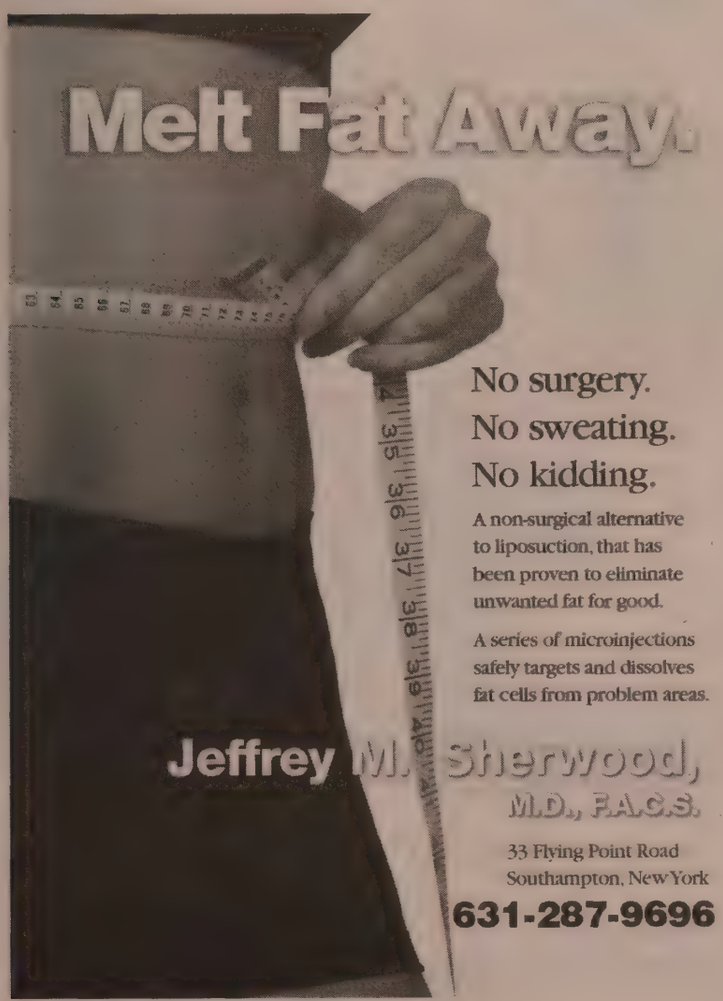

Don't even get me started on the Yankees. WHAT THE HELL IS WRONG WITH THIS TEAM? I can't even get into this season. It is so depressing that I almost didn't appreciate the girl in the tennis outfit jogging.

What to do? What to do?

Well, for one, acting like you are not looking at somebody is a skill that I am going to have to learn how to develop a little better. Every time I shake someone's hand, especially at the beach, I've had to repeat over and over in my head, "Don't look, don't look, don't look, don't look, oh damn it you just looked!"

You've got to try to play it cool. After all, you are in the Hamptons and so just by virtue of where you are physically located, you have to have it completely together. But act like it's no big deal.

I'm going to the gym.

stickler about signs. I was in a bathroom in a restaurant the other day and read a sign over the toilet that read ONLY PUT TOILET PAPER IN THE TOILET. I thought — what's the point?

Now, my problems with CAPACITY: 358 BATHERS are many. Here they are.

Does this refer to the WHOLE ocean?

Or perhaps this just refers to the ocean in front of the lifeguard stand?

Does it refer ONLY to people who are actually bathing at the same time? Or does it refer to people who consider themselves bathers who are not in the ocean but on a blanket on the beach thinking about it?

If somebody is on the beach who just likes to lie around and is either afraid of the water, unable to swim or of some religious cult that forbids ocean bathing, does that excuse them from the count?

If you are the 359th bather, is it YOU who gets the ticket? Or is it the lifeguard who, for failing to follow procedures, gets the ticket? After all, while you are bathing, you cannot do the count of the number of others who are bathing. You aren't high enough. But the lifeguards are.

Can you tap somebody on the shoulder when you go in and tell them they are IT and they must leave the ocean so it stays at 358?

Is it not true that, as some rooms are bigger than others, so some oceans are also bigger than others? Wouldn't that affect the capacity at a particular ocean beach?

Cooper's Beach

Why 358?

Is that perhaps the maximum number of bathers that it is felt five lifeguards, the usual complement of lifeguards at a beach, could handle at any one time?

Since surfers aren't bathers, are they exempt from the count? What about people on inflatables?

If the beach is smaller than usual, but the depth and width of the ocean facing that beach are larger than usual, does the number of bathers allowed go up?

Is there an underwater sign just offshore of the beach that gives the capacity of the number of fish who can be there? Or the percent of them that could be sharks?

Did the County hire a consulting firm to do a study on the maximum number of bathers allowed at a beach? If so, how much did it cost to do this study? Did all of the taxpayers pay for this or was the cost just in those districts near the beach?

Will the County require a specially designated employee, perhaps a new employee to constantly monitor the number of bathers at a beach and if not, will a lifeguard have to do that? And if so, how will that increase the likelihood of a botched rescue effort?

What in God's name will they think of next?

Well, I suppose none of this matters. What DOES matter is that the next time you go to the beach and you want to go into the water, count the bathers already in.

If there's 358 or more, either don't go in or look both ways and make sure the coast is clear, then go.

And stay away from SCUBA divers in blue. • prepared.

At the counter, I held out a dollar bill. A man at one of the ovens turned around. Who was this fellow, was the look on his face? I smiled.

"One garlic?"

He nodded, picked one up still steaming from a wire basket and put it into a small white bag. As he handed it to me, I handed him the dollar, then held up the palm of my hand to indicate there should be no change in return. Not at that hour.

"Well thank YOU," he said, beaming.

There is nothing like a hot, fresh bagel made by Jewish bakers — well, Latino bakers — at 4:30 in the morning. Nothing.

I started the car, clicked my seatbelt into place, moved around a new delivery truck that had just pulled up and drove off. I crunched happily away. Unbelievable. I was under the influence, no doubt about it. The car weaved out of the lane and I pulled it back.

A fantasy: No, officer. I was just eating this, um, bagel.

Step out of the car.

A few purple and pink clouds brightened the far shore of the harbor as I turned up into my driveway. •

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander # 450
Life's a Beach

Like the midnight hour clanging in Big Ben, Memorial Day has clanged and heralded the opening of the Shelter Island Summer Season. Tourists will come in waves now, like locusts on the move. They'll stop and feed and move on again.

There is one kind of tourist that I loathe above all the others. I call her, "She Who Must Be Seen." She appears at the beach. She is between 20 and 30 years of age. She may even be up to 45 (with some work done,) and can still hold her own with the 20 year olds. She is thin, wears a bathing suit that is spray painted on. She has no cellulite or stretch marks. She wears big hats and dark sunglasses with designer logos on the side. She drinks imported bottled water that is always cold, even if she leaves it in the sun. She does not go in the water, except to wade. That's how I figured out the bathing suits were spray painted on, if the Shes go in the water, the suits wash off. She is wealthy but complains constantly about stuff I'd give anything to complain about, like this actual quote - "Well, I just don't like the color of the leather in the new Jag, it's too medium tan, so I'm having it redone custom to a soft ecru. It'll be about $7,000, but I have a right to be happy, don't I?"

If you think I sound bitter because I'm overweight, middle-aged and poor, you only think that because you're right. However, being overweight, middle-aged and poor does not preclude being clever, resourceful and persevering. Not only that, but I'm not alone. There's are lotsa gals like me on the Island and this summer, we have a plan.

This summer when I go to the beach, I'll be bringing a few extra items in my beach bag:

Small knife and two thick rubber bands. Over the winter, I have practiced whittling popsicle sticks into sharp points and propelling them with double-thick rubber bands. From the living room, I can impale an apple in the kitchen. From my beach blanket, I should have no trouble hitting implants that are pointing to the sky on other beach blankets at thirty paces.

Water pistol. While the She Who Must Be Seens sleep in the sun, I can dissolve their suits. When they wake, they'll be showing the 1% of their bodies that was covered and maybe some secret tattoos. They all seem to have a little tattoo at the apex of their gluteal fold — a tramp stamp.

Food that smells like food. I'll bring my mushroom and garlic lasagna, warm from the oven, and a little hand-held fan to blow the smell their way. None of the Shes have smelled real food since they were kids. I'll lob a square of lasagna in the middle of them and watch the frenzy. I predict half of them will swarm it and half will run away and throw up just to get the food smell out of their nose.

Small bottles of Chanel Sun Lotion SPF 1000, but I have replaced the lotion with old Coppertone Instant Tan. I'll just leave the bottles in the sand near them. They'll all think they dropped theirs and pick it up. It won't be 'till after they get home and get out of the shower and see their orange streaked faces and bodies that the fun will begin.

Pens with pinhole leaks: I have pre-punctured about a dozen disposable pens. The Shes never seen to have pens and commonly ask to borrow one from the more practical looking women on the beach. This year, I'll give them a pen that will work fine and tell them to keep it. When the pen goes into the designer beach bag (can you stand it?) and the heat expands the puncture, oooohhhh, the horror of a ruined lining!

Mini M&Ms in Advil bottles. When the Shes ask if I might happen to have anything for a headache, because they think I'm so nice after I gave them the pens, I'll give them some tan M&Ms for Advil. Whereupon, sugar will enter their bodies and suddenly, their bodies, sensing the possibility of nutrients, will call out for more. I'll try to time it so they get the "Advil" just as the ice cream truck comes by. They will be bidding wars for Toasted Almond ice cream pops.

Ahhh, I love it when a plan comes together.

dizzy from these numbers being bandied about — was the East Hampton Town Supervisor, Bill McGintee. He went to the Town Board and explained the situation and said he thought that most of these houses, at least temporarily, could be brought to the ten-acre front lawn of Town Hall and then could be given out from there. But at least the property would be cleared. The Town Board agreed with this idea, it was presented to the couple and they accepted.

And so it was that I got invited to a party, a final party at the home of Adelaide de Menil and Ted Carpenter, in celebration of the latest book written by adventurer and author Peter Matthessein of Sagaponack. Chris and I had champagne in the main barn that had been converted to a studio living room, we walked the property, we thanked Ted and Adelaide for inviting us and we thought about what was to come.

Today, the couple has moved off this property to another smaller home not too far away. Six of those buildings are now on the front lawn of the Town Hall and are to be moved no further. Architects from the firm of A. M. Stern have designed a plan to make these homes an integral part of Town Hall. One will be a supervisor's office, another a meeting room, another a councilmen's room and so forth and so on. Glass causeways will connect them. The new main entrance to the Town Hall will be in one of them. And behind these buildings, the current town hall, a very nondescript brick building with a flat roof, will simply become an addition to what is out front.

Adelaide and Ted

The remaining half dozen buildings have also found new homes. One has already been brought to the historic park in Amagansett to be part of the Miss Amelia complex. Another has also been moved and now is at the Mulford Farm in East Hampton, opposite the green. Another is to be moved to a site behind a church in Springs. And still another is to be moved to the Town Marine Museum on Bluff Road in Amagansett.

One would suppose that Adelaide de Menil and Ted Carpenter would be quite sad at the end of their time on this property. But when you think about it, in the end, that is what happens to all of us. We move on. What we leave behind gets picked over or thrown out. There are new beginnings.

During the moving of the six homes from the property to Town Hall in late March — a project that was done all at one time on one particular day — Adelaide was to be seen everywhere along the way, wearing a distinctive black greatcoat and hat, asking about this and that, noting obstacles and opportunities and essentially getting herself in harm's way to backseat drive the move by Davis House Movers the four miles from the property to Town Hall. Ted was there too, but he just stood there for the most part off to one side, his hands clasped behind him, looking out grandly as events, orchestrated by his wife, unfolded in front of him.

I did speak to her then and she was in a cheerful, excited mood and was flushed with excitement as the day progressed. A helicopter hovering overhead was up there, she said, so her nephew could take moving pictures of the event for posterity. He was up there almost all day.

The cost of moving all of these homes, which surely must have been a million dollars or more, was paid for by Adelaide and Ted. In addition, Adelaide and Ted are contributing $2 million toward an endowment that would provide for the future upkeep of the ones at Town well-preserved, with their herb gardens and old orchards, that it seems almost like a family is still living there.

Another example of a gorgeous old home that, instead of giving way to modernity has gone the way of historical preservation, is the Albert Rogers Mansion. This home was built in 1843 by Albert Rogers, a local whaling captain, in the heyday of the whaling industry. It is located at 17 Meeting House Lane in Southampton. Today, the mansion is home to the Southampton Historical Museum. It has been functioning since 1898 to collect and preserve documents and artifacts that contribute to Southampton's history. The museum is a complex of buildings that recreate the area in the post-Civil War era. There is a one-room schoolhouse, a paint shop, a blacksmith shop, and other small shops that capture the essence of small-town life in Southampton.

Parrish Art Museum Main Entrance, 1913

Since long before English settlers arrived in Southampton, people thrived on the natural bounty of the area. The Shinnecocks, as well as other Native American tribes, lived here for thousands of years. Even though only a few hundred Shinnecocks still live on the reservation, their history is a significant part of Southampton's culture. When Thomas Halsey arrived with that first crew of English settlers, Shinnecocks met them and taught them how to live off the land. They taught them about local foods like corn and traditions like whaling. Without these lessons, the settlers would not have survived long. The Shinnecock Nation Cultural Center and Museum only just recently opened its doors to the public. In 2001, they hosted "A Walk With the People," when everyone was invited onto the reservation. The museum, which is the only one owned and operated by Native Americans on Long Island, houses artifacts from the Shinnecocks' whaling history in its traditional longhouse building. Exhibits about their cultural history give insight into the development of English settlers as well.

The Parrish Art Museum stands in downtown Southampton with an air of authority. It was built in 1898 in an Italianate style by Samuel Parrish. Parrish, originally from Philadelphia, had recently moved to New York. He began visiting a family summer home in Southampton, which had already become a popular resort town. Parrish quickly became invested in the development of Southampton.

In the 1880s, Parrish began collecting art seriously. In the late 1880s, this civic-minded collector had just returned to Long Island from a trip to Italy, where he fell in love with Italian Renaissance painters. His hope was to "fulfill my attempt to transplant to a small, once Puritan village on the eastern end of Long Island a delicate exotic in the form of an artistic collection that would express at least something of the spirit of the Italian Renaissance." The museum was designed by architect Grosvenor Atterbury over the period of about 20 years.

Southampton has a beauty about it that is at once rustic and refined. The combination of respect for history and love of progress has made it what it is today — a beautiful, modern town thriving in the 21st century, with a touch of history that just won't fade.

Stavola get through the fourth inning jam with a crowd of almost 250 fans looking on.

The intensity might have rattled other pitchers, but not Stavola.

"I like being in pressure situations," Stavola said. "You get such an adrenaline rush. I never get scared or nervous. I want to strike batters out for my team."

All that was going through the junior's head during the nail biting fourth inning. "Just get the out. Take one pitch at a time."

The momentum continued to swing in East Hampton's favor.

With one out in the bottom of the fifth, O'Brien hit a blooper over the second baseman's head and slid into second with a double. Danielle Waleko took over on the base paths for O'Brien. The next two Bonackers' hitters got hit by a pitch and struck out, respectively. Marta Johann came in to pinch hit with two outs and runners on first and second. Coach Lou Reale then called for a double steal. The Panthers' catcher wasn't able to get a throw off with the right hand hitting Johann in the batters box. The Bonackers' runners advanced to second and third. The stage was now set and Johann delivered with a RBI single through the right side, putting East Hampton on top 1-0.

"We put [Johann] up there to pinch hit because we had a hunch she'd get a hit," Reale said. "We just wanted to be aggressive and get the runners in scoring position and it worked."

One run was all Stavola and the East Hampton Bonackers would need.

Stavola retired Miller Place's seven, eight and nine hitters in order to end the game. Stavola's last out came via strikeout, her tenth on the day and 299th in 148 innings pitched. She ended the game with a one-hitter, having giving up five walks and hitting one batter.

Doolin was once again the bad-luck-losing-pitcher. In three games against East Hampton, Doolin lost all of them while only giving up four total runs.

The No.1 East Hampton Bonackers (21-1) will play its nemesis, according to Reale — sixth seeded Islip in the best-of-three Suffolk Class A Finals.

But East Hampton may not have been advancing past the semifinals had it not been for the protective mandatory cages on the hitters helmets. In the bottom of the fourth inning Stavola fouled a ball off of her mask. She was able to shake it off, finishing the at bat and the inning with a ground out to short.

"Thank God for that cage," Stavola said.

Reale said that East Hampton wasn't as lucky in the pre-facemask softball days as players were occasionally injured.

"In the past we had a girl who broke her nose in the playoffs," Reale said. "[Stavola] would've been out with a broken nose."

Fortunately, the modest seventeen-year-old pitcher finished the game with a little ache and pain, immediately putting an ice wrap around her right arm after the outing.

Asked how she stays grounded with all of her success, Stavola replied, "I always believe there's going to be someone out there who's better than you. To me, the team is so much more important."

THE WHITEHOUSE HAS A NEW PRESIDENT

There's a new White House in town, and it's not in Washington D.C., it's in Hampton Bays! Say "Hello" to your new President, radio personality and entrepreneur, Vic Latino. Vic is the new co-owner with his longtime partner Joe D'Onofrio, of the 100+ year-old massive space that was CPI and now Latino and crew have transformed the historical space into a 45,000-square-foot, sleek, late night pleasure zone called, The Whitehouse Nightclub. The ginormous venue was completely gutted and renovated with two dance floors, two DJs, an all-night shopping boutique that houses a vast array of shoes from Hampton Shoe Vixen and Sweet Anezka's Lingerie, a sophisticated Lingerie shop that carries designers like La Perla and Cosabella. The club also houses two restaurants including a full sushi bar and gourmet pizzeria. Vic was adamant when he told me, "I want everyone to feel like a celebrity in here!" Latino is certainly qualified for the job. Born and bred on Long Island, Latino grew up in Holbrook and graduated from Sachem High School and SUNY Plattsburgh. He's paid his dues on air, having completed a successful six-year run that ended in November of '06, as 103.5 WKTU's late night jock, and now reigning on XM Satellite, Channel 81. Latino is involved in several projects including part owner of Mateo's Restaurant. Yet, Latino is so dedicated to his latest club venture out East, that this past Memorial Day weekend he even put his family to work, including his sister, Melissa, brother, Jason and Dad, Jose, who were all right by his side. The WH celebrated it's grand opening this past holiday weekend and delivered some big talent to the Hamptons, thanks to Latino's friends, who happen to be famous. This past Saturday evening was hosted by "Girl Next Door" TV reality star, Kendra Wilkinson. Sunday, the club was even more packed and partygoers lined up in droves to celebrate. At 11:30 p.m., Latino turned to his staff and gave a signal, "I'm on my way out to pick her up." The "her" Latino was referring to is none other than Ms. Stacy Ann Ferguson, a.k.a. Fergie from The BEPs, who's been a friend of his for many years. At 12:30 a.m., Fergie busted through the front doors of the club rock star style, surrounded by an entourage of at least twenty people consisting of her bodyguards, friends and family. The nearby clubbers went wild as they spotted The Dutchess, who was blowing kisses and signing autographs. Dressed in all black, Fergie was sportin' her signature hairstyle, long honey blonde spiral curls parted in the middle, and shared, "I had a nice Memorial Day barbecue today, turkey burgers, turkey franks, potato salad, the whole nine." The petite superstar worked the crowd with ease, posing for photos and in a relaxed, soft voice, almost a whisper, told me, "I just came here to hang out for a day. We're passing through on my tour and we have a day off, it's Memorial Day weekend and when you're near the Hamptons, you kinda just wanna go." Fergie smiled and went on, "Cause I can get into the parties now, alright? I don't have to wait on the line, yeah!" Fergie certainly doesn't wait on lines anymore, now they line up to just get a glimpse of the humble artist who can certainly afford couture, but still keeps it real by shopping at second hand stores, "I love shopping. This tour, we'll go to thrift shops in every city. I got about twenty tee shirts in Philly." 1:15 p.m., the Dutchess was escorted to the Celebrity VIP level, which is directly across from the VIP area and overlooks the dance floor. The Dutchess settled into her first class accommodations, complete with a tower of Cristal. It was girls' night out for Fergie, whose fiancé, actor Josh Duhamel, was replaced by her best friend, Eileen Grund. Security almost booted singer Samantha Cole from Fergie's table, until they realized Cole is a longtime friend. They both toured together years ago and were neighbors in LA. Cole gushed, "You haven't heard nothin' yet, wait 'till her next album, Fergie can really sing!" About fifteen minutes later, Fergie stood up, walked over to the balcony, pulled an Evita and waved down to her fans as they roared back, "We love you, Fergie!" DJ Robbie Rivera kicked off Fergie's visit with her hit single "Glamorous" and The Dutchess started to join in for a sing along with her fans below. As the DJ transitioned into "Fergalicious," the masses kept screaming their lungs out! Now, even though Fergie continues to tour her hit solo album worldwide, she still plans to reunite with the BEPs soon and revealed, "The experience has been amazing. You know, of course, I miss the guys. I mean, I love them, but we're touring at the end of the year so it's not a big deal."

As for the WH lineup this coming Saturday, expect to see the one and only Flavor Flav on the dance floor and, coming up later this summer season, Kevin Dillion from HBO's hit show, "Entourage," will host. Plus, Jay Z's artist, Rihanna, will make an appearance, too. And, Latino promises, "You never know what tricks we'll have up our sleeve." Performance (continued from page 43)

Hall.

The work of art? Well, I'd like to consider it as a sort of performance art, a ballet of bringing all these houses over to the property at the beginning of a time when so many historic buildings were being torn down in the name of progress. And ending with the ballet of bringing all these buildings back for the public to see.

When Adelaide and Ted look back upon it, that all by itself is their legacy. They borrowed some houses and they returned them. There will be no historic markers to indicate where these houses once stood in this town. There will be the houses themselves, on other sites perhaps — many colonial homes have been moved half a dozen times over the years — and these homes will be available for Ted and Adelaide to visit, cherish and help maintain. As for what was there, well, it is now utterly gone, finally and no doubt about it. But what a legacy.

For Ted and Adelaide, it is a new day.

As for what will happen to the property, well, Ron Baron won the property at a price of $105 million, an amount about three times as much as the highest price ever paid for a home in the Hamptons. The parcel is clear. The slate is clean. And another new day begins. •

JULIA GARDINER TYLER OF EAST HAMPTON, AMERICA'S 1ST LADY

By T.J. Clemente

The scenic South End Cemetery in East Hampton, nestled beside the pond, is the final resting place for many of those who played a large role in the making of the Town of East Hampton. The gentle layers of white tombstones line up generations of family history. Perhaps the most prominent family name is Gardiner, the founding of whose Island home, Gardiner Island, precedes the founding of the East Hampton, then called Maidstone, in 1648. In 1639 King James I issued a "Royal Patent" to Lion Gardiner for the Island. At the time, Lion Gardiner referred to the island as the Isle of Wright. One of the largest grave markers in the South End Cemetery is that of David Gardiner, father of a first lady Julia Gardiner Tyler and perhaps the only deceased member in the famed cemetery whose untimely death was witnessed by a sitting President of the United States. He died aboard the PRINCETON, a pre-civil war era naval vessel that hosted the President of the United States, many cabinet members and 200 distinguished guests on February 28, 1844.

David Gardiner had brought his 23-year-old daughter to Washington D.C. as a sort of coming out party on the national level for Julia, whose beauty was unmatched in the high social circles of that time. In fact, at that time, she was called "The Rose of Long Island." The legend is that Julia wasn't feeling well that day and went down below the deck, saving her own life. Had she remained right next to her father, then a New York State Senator with ample political powers and influence, she most likely would have been killed as he was by the explosion that resulted from the testing of a new twelve-inch gun manufactured in New York City. The explosion killed the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Navy, an ambassador from Brussels, the President's personal valet and a few others besides David Gardiner.

When told that her father had been killed, the young East Hampton debutante literally fainted into the arms of the widowed President Tyler. Julia Tyler said the first words she ever spoke to her future husband while in his arms, regaining her composure. Of course, other historians claimed they were introduced earlier in the day. A wake was held in the East Room of the White House for all those killed, except the black presidential valet. David Gardiner was buried in Congressional Cemetery in Washington, D.C. before being reburied in East Hampton.

Only four months later, the widowed President Tyler, the first Vice-President to become President by the death of a sitting President, and Julia Gardiner were married. The country was shocked to learn that the widowed Virginian President of the United States had married a 24-year-old New Yorker. Julia Tyler loved having gala balls and it is said that one of her famous galas was attended by over 1,000 invited guests. After his brief Presidency, the Tylers resided in Richmond, Virginia. A house on Main Street was referred to as the East Hampton White House whenever President Tyler was there. At the time of his death in 1862, President Tyler was serving in the Congress of the Confederacy in Richmond. Julia bore President Tyler seven children, who lived alongside the eight his first wife blessed him with. Julia and President Tyler's first son was named David Gardiner Tyler, in honor of her dad, and was born in East Hampton.

David Gardiner Tyler, after attending Washington College — now called Washington and Lee — actually fought for the Army of Virginia under Robert E. Lee in the Civil War and was with Lee when he surrendered to General U.S. Grant at the Appomattox Court House. David went on to serve as a United States Congressman from the state of Virginia in the 1890s and presided as a Judge in Virginia until his death in 1926. He his mother, Julia Gardiner Tyler, his father, President John Tyler, and President Tyler's first wife are all buried in Richmond.

After the Civil War, the widowed 46-year-old former first lady, Julia Gardiner, was broke after having her property confiscated by the North. She and Mary Todd Lincoln were the first First Ladies to have Congress appropriate a Federal Pension for widowed former First Ladies. The original sum was $1,200. It was increased to $5,000 later on to assist Julia Tyler plus the widows of President Garfield, President Polk and President Lincoln. Historians enjoy pointing out that when President Tyler's last child died, it was 100 years after the birth of his first, Mary Tyler, who never truly adjusted to being four years older than her stepmother.

With a $5,000 annual pension, Julia Gardiner Tyler, one of two first ladies born in East Hampton — the other being Jackie Kennedy — lived comfortably in Richmond until she died in 1889, when she was not quite seventy years old. The former "Rose of Long Island" remains forever in Virginia, yet her impression on East Hampton persists to this day.

SAG HARBOR STORE AT 27 MAIN STREET IS SOLD

By Janine Cheviot

John Gruen's plan to knock down a building located at 127 Main Street next to the historic "Gingerbread House" in Sag Harbor and replace it with a larger structure has been a controversial topic for the past three years. But on March 28, Mr. Gruen passed the baton to part-time Sag Harbor resident Jim Giorgio, selling him the one-story building for $1.5 million. Mr. Giorgio also owns the building located at 125 Main Street and a building on Bridge Street, where the bar Havens House used to be.

Mr. Gruen never officially listed the house. He was sick of fighting with the town and offered Mr. Giorgio the property. "I knew he [Mr. Giorgio] owned the building next door and thought it would be a great opportunity for him. It was the right move." According to his attorney, Dennis Downes, Mr. Giorgio will pick up where Mr. Gruen left off with plans for 127 Main Street, incorporating few modifications that have not yet been made public. But if his proposal to turn the one-story building on Bridge Street into a two-story Victorian-style house structure with retail space on the first floor and two apartments on the second are any indication of his plans for the 127 Main Street building, they will be almost identical to Mr. Gruen's.

As for now, the new female clothing store "Lifestyle" will occupy the building, offering casual apparel and accessories for all ages. Mr. Gruen told me that his original plans were initially "admired by many people, including those who eventually objected to them," but that a few local residents, who were very involved in the Sag Harbor Historical Society, classified his proposal as a monstrosity and looked for every opportunity to stop the project. "I would have preferred to continue with my plans, but it wasn't worth it," said Gruen. "I didn't want to deal with it anymore."

Critics believed that Mr. Gruen's proposed structure would appear "sandwiched" between the adjacent houses, even though his blueprints show that the building would occupy just 35 percent of the lot. Dolores Fenn, a long-time Sag Harbor resident who was arguably Mr. Gruen's biggest opponent, owns the historical Gingerbread House located just east of 127 Main Street. Ms. Fenn hired Jeffrey Bragman, a lawyer from East Hampton, to fight Mr. Gruen's proposal. Mr. Bragman explained, "We were fighting the construction of an oversized building that did not meet Sag Harbor Village parking requirements."

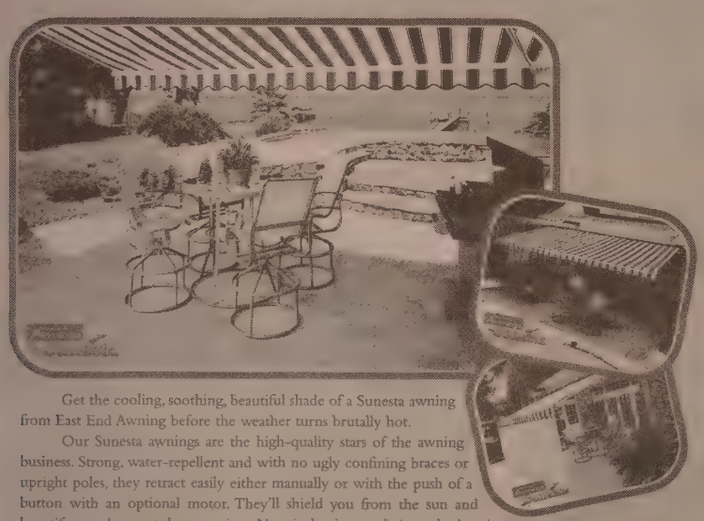

But Mr. Gruen disagrees. "I complied with all the parking regulations when I applied for the permits. They changed the regulations after I applied, so I was grandfathered in," he explained. "The parking issue was never an issue at all. She [Ms. Fenn] didn't want my project to happen because it would obscure the view from her living room." He noted that his proposed structure was not out of scale with other buildings in Sag Harbor and would match the 19th century style that defines Main Street.

How big is too big in Sag Harbor? The answer to that question appears to be subjective. I contacted The Village of Sag Harbor for specific information on their codes and standards, but an employee in the Building Department explained that Mr. Gruen's requests were not necessarily denied because of particular violations. She confirmed that Mr. Giorgio may not encounter the same problems — depending on factors such as what type of business he plans on using the building for. "Our department hasn't received any applications from Mr. Giorgio, but these decisions are made on a case-by-case basis," she said.

Two weeks ago, just a month after Mr. Gruen sold his property to Mr. Giorgio, the Gingerbread House was put on the market for the first time in 43 years. Mr. Gruen referred to this as "a slap in the face." The Gingerbread House will most likely be purchased for commercial use, but will always remain on the National Register of Historic Places. Mr. Bragman addressed the possibility of Mr. Giorgio proposing a structure similar to Mr. Gruen's by saying, "The regulatory framework will remain the same no matter who owns the property. It will be the same dynamic. I hope that any future project will comply with parking and result in a much smaller building."

Mr. Gruen has been a Sag Harbor resident for over 30 years and says he never intended to compromise the historical integrity of the town. He just asked that both side of the issue be looked at fairly. "I live by the motto 'you only live once' and it's time to move on," he said. When asked if he would continue to purchase properties for commercial use, Mr. Gruen responded without hesitation, "Yes. Definitely." As for the future of 127 Main Street, only time will tell. Perhaps Mr. Giorgio's best bet is to purchase the Gingerbread House, too.

The location was Janna Bullock's Norman Jaffe Art House on Meadow Lane to celebrate the Peter Beard photo art from the African jungle, and most guests arrived in wildlife garb. Peter Beard was on hand, surrounded by a bevy of beauties, which he called "his living sculpture". There were cocktails, a buffet dinner and dancing. The Art House display will be open to the public throughout much of June. It's worth a visit.

Ability Fair

The Story Of A North Fork Family Doing Some Good In The World

By Phyllis Lombardi

There's got to be at least a hundred of them every year on the North Fork. You know. The art and crafts fairs that spring up all over the place. In schools, parks, firehouses, churches, on a village green or in a retirement community. And the stuff for sale is usually just beautiful. Watercolor paintings of our bays and creeks, oil portraits, carefully stitched quilts, all kinds of hand-crafted toys and decorative pieces. Why, people come from all over Long Island and beyond to visit our fairs - and perhaps purchase a remembrance of their day here. You should see the cars! They're everywhere. Though North Forkers are used to it. As I said, it's been going on for years.

But this year? Just a few weeks ago something different in the world of art and crafts fairs came to our North Fork. Something new and very wonderful. It came quietly, steadily, guided by a devoted and dedicated couple, Linda and Mike Burke of Mattituck. They are devoted and dedicated to each other and their family, of course, but also to a kind of cause that took shape in their hearts and minds almost 19 years ago. I want to tell you about it.

Those 19 years ago, Linda and Mike had a young son attending a school for the developmentally disabled. He was doing well in his classes but his parents were concerned about the difficulties the young people had in establishing and maintaining friendships. The students traveled from all over the North Fork to their school on the South Fork. Not easy to get together with their friends after school or during summer vacations.

Linda and Mike, along with some other parents at the school, came up with what has proven a fine solution – Friends Unlimited. This is a congenial organization whose goal is to provide picnics, ball games, trips near and far, parties – you name it. It's spelled fun and good times for the developmentally disabled. For 19 years!

Now what does this have to do with art and crafts? Well, Linda had an idea (another one – she's full of 'em). Why not have a couple of days set aside for those developmentally disabled who have art and crafts talent and show their creativity to the world? Fine, Linda. But where? Well Linda is a member of the Old Town Art and Crafts Guild in Cutchogue so she approached New Suffolk's Bob Kuhne, president of the Guild, with her idea. Bob said yes, yes, yes. The Guild offered its building for the fair and Linda and Mike got to work.

And it came to pass. First the name: Ability Fair. Then the opening reception on a Saturday evening saw the Guild parking lot crowded, the Guild's display rooms filled with fine art and crafts, scores of proud relatives and friends admiring the work and enjoying wine, cheese, cider, cookies. All the while the artists and craftspeople accepted handshakes and hugs for their magnificent accomplishments. First-place ribbons were awarded, lots of photographs were taken. The last photo, a group shot, brought loud and long applause from the fairgoers. The next day, Sunday, the fair re-opened to sunny skies and many visitors. Oh, there was something else different about this art and crafts fair. Nothing was for sale. Everything was just because.

Everything? I can tell you only some of what I saw. How I wish you were there.

On one wall hung two hooked rugs – floral pastels by David Woodward of Southold. On another wall was fine framed photography. For example, Mattituck's Chris Burke had a super shot of Veterans Park in Mattituck. Dennis Healy of Greenport displayed his photography as did Cheryl Gromcki of Southold. Outstanding was her collage of photos of the TWA Flight 800 Memorial in Shirley.

Gerard McEneaney of Greenport talked just a little of his work. Rather, he talked baseball. Gerard's brother Jimmy works at Shea Stadium so Gerard gets to quite a few games. And Gerard is going to the Bahamas with Jimmy and his family. How about a one-man show on that cruise ship, Gerard?

Susan Gannon, 19, of Cutchogue, really caught my eye with her dolphin needlepoint pillow and her wood-board rocking horse ridden by papier-mâchéé Emily. Susan named the rider Emily after a favorite teacher.

Yes, this Ability Fair was a thing of beauty, a joy forever. Linda and Mike plan to do it again next year. This may sound foolish but I'm going to suggest they consider changing the name – from Ability Fair to Ability Great.

The Beach Glass Mystery

Is It Possible To Track Down The Origin Of Beach Glass?

By Nancy Keeshan

As a child I spent many a lazy Saturday afternoon combing the seashore for treasures. I found numerous shells of all shapes and sizes, pieces of driftwood and from time to time a precious piece of beach glass. This was the ultimate treasure because the colors were always so beautifully frosted and there was always a bit of mystery about where it came from. Throughout the years I have collected many pieces of colored glass from the seashore and kept them in a glass jar. I continue to stop and pick up glass on the beach when I have the time. Most of these glass pieces lately are green, white, and brown. Occasionally I find a blue piece or even red. This is of course a "banner day" at the beach.

The other day while taking one of my walks along the sea, I came upon a tiny piece of orange beach glass. I started thinking about sea glass. What is the story about beach glass? The sea manages to turn unwanted pieces of broken glass into beautifully rounded frosted jewels. What is this glass in the first place, how is it formed, and where does it really come from? These questions rolling around my head made me think that it was all worth checking out. Here are a few interesting things that I discovered.

Sea glass, beach glass, mermaid tears, or lucky glass; It goes by many names, but is made the very same way. Whether it began as a discarded bottle or an amazing glass relic from long ago, sea glass begins as regular glass. Sooner or later it gets tossed into the sea, tumbled by the ocean waves, and transformed by the sand, surf and salt water into the treasure which is washed up along the shore

Maybe it was someone's discarded coke bottle, or perhaps it came from an old shipwreck. It's interesting to think about where these bits of glass came from in the first place. Where on earth did it start its journey?

The fact is that wherever you find people living near the sea, you will find beach glass and sometimes the story that it brings with it. Scientists say that it takes a minimum of three years for the ocean to wear glass down to the point where it can officially be called beach glass. There are different kinds as well. "Rounds" are what remain from the bottom of old bottles. Some people collect these rounds and make wind chimes out them. Other pieces of beach glass are still imprinted with brand names and unique patterns and some glass is campfire glass which is basically glass that has been melted in a fire and smooth down by the ocean. The most common beach glass is simply rounded out shards of something we can't quite recognize anymore. It's fun to speculate about what they use to be. These small shards of tumbled glass are the ones often used for jewelry or in making colorful glass mosaics.

I often wonder why I don't find the quantity of beach glass as I used to when I was a kid. This is probably because glass is no longer used as it was in the past. Before the 1960s, everything came in glass bottles and jars, even milk. Today plastic has replaced most of the glass we use every day. People also used to throw a great deal of their household trash into the ocean, thinking that it would simply just disappear. We know better today. People are aware of pollution and are more informed about protecting our environment. Since recycling glass is such a popular idea, sea glass is becoming harder and harder to find. Beach glass is found along shorelines, even rivers and bays.

What about the color of the glass? Can that give us any clues?

The color of the glass always determines it's origin.

Red is the rarest of beach glass. Long ago red glass was made using a mixture of copper and gold. It was for that reason that many people could not afford the beautiful garnet reds in their collections. Today, you might be lucky enough to find a small piece of red glass. These bits of modern beach glass are often called "Riptide Rubies." Often the origin is a broken car brake light or boat light.

There are so many different colors. Depression glass is responsible for the light blues and pastel colors. Old medicine bottles and beer bottles are the brown and amber pieces. Clear glass may come from anything in recent years including shampoo bottles to milk bottles. However, clear glass that was produced before the year 1914 would have been made with manganese, with turns a purple color when exposed to ultraviolet rays. So, if you manage to find a little piece of purple glass, it could be very old glass which was once clear.

If you find a dark olive-green glass it could very well be what was known as "black glass" which was produced with amounts of iron and used for soda bottles

McKnights Benefit

Greenport Residents Rise Up To Help A Neighbor In Need

By Jessica Gold

On June 8th a bbq/dance will be held to benefit Phillip McKnight and family at Mitchell Field from 7-10 p.m. All proceeds will go to helping the McKnights pay medical bills. The jazzy/blues band The Lone Sharks have volunteered to perform. This talented foursome will be performing, getting the crowd moving and letting the McKnights know that there are people out there who care. A committee formed to help out the McKnights and as a result, everything and anything needed for this fundraiser has been taking care of in true, North Fork form. Don Fisher of Southold donated his sound system, the Greenport Fire Department is grilling hot dogs and hamburgers. In case of rain, the Burton Potter American Legion Post has even offered its hall (charging only for electricity if used). There will be a "pass the hat" at the dance in hopes of collecting enough to get the McKnights covered until Phillip is officially retired. Thus far $3,470,10 has been collected to defer some costs. Here's hoping that the hat is filled and the McKnights can have life be just a bit easier for them.

All of us at some time or another need to rely on friends for help. Phillip Mcknight is lucky to be surrounded by some of the best friends on Long Island. In April 2006, McKnight, the father of 5 beautiful children, was diagnosed with a Sarcoma Tumor and is currently undergoing treatment. Unfortunately, illness and keeping his job just didn't match and McKnight soon found himself too ill to work and without health benefits for many months. Although his health benefits have since been re-instated by Greenport Village, he is still responsible for a very large co-pay of $700 per month to maintain coverage until he can qualify for Medicare and retirement benefits. Unable to currently work, his family is truly struggling to stay afloat. Loretta McKnight is caring for her sick husband, maintaining consistency for the 5 caring children and working three days a week as a nurses aide. She is hoping to increase it to four to help with expenses and secure additional benefits. This struggling, caring family needs support. Phillip and Loretta are well respected and have done so much for the community, now the community wants to give back.

If you'd like to make a donation, please send checks to Checks should be sent to First Universalist Church, P.O. Box 221, Southold, N.Y. 11971. Please make checks payable to The Friends of Phillip McKnight fund, your donation is tax deductible. The McKnights have expressed their sincerest gratitude to the community for their help.

As you can see, each piece of colored glass tells a story. It represents a time in history whether just five years ago or twenty-five years ago.

Everyone has their favorite color of beach glass, as well as their favorite section of beach to comb. This time of year, before the crowds get here, is a great time to find beach treasures, especially glass. Look for places that get a lot of wave action and you should be in luck. I hope you will beg my pardon, but I am not going to divulge my own secret spot, or I may never find that purple piece for own collection.

Monstrosity

A Writer's View Of The Broadwater Plan

By T.J. Clemente

It truly comes down to concerns for public safety verses a corporation's view of a way to make a profit, while at the same time addressing its perception of the energy needs of the local area. The Broadwater Energy project which we all know plans to build the liquefied natural gas port in the middle of the Long Island Sound that will perhaps change forever the tenor of the Sound for exclusive energy needs and services well as profits for Shell Oil and TransCanada is troubling. Local political leaders such as Marc Alessi (d) of Manor Park, Fred Thiele (r) of Sag Harbor, and Ken LaValle (r) of Port Jefferson have introduced legislation in the State Legislature to study the cost to the local communities.

It seems Broadwater Energy officials are losing patience with the opposition to their plan to turn Long Island Sound into their own private profit center. Trying to take advantage of the energy crisis to slickly slide this adventurous plan with so many environmental concerns is beginning to reach critical mass. There is no doubt the well-financed aims of the oil interest is looking to get a foothold on off shore platforms in this area. Their deep pockets have been used to "educate" public officials to see things their way for the public good. As the project becomes more known to the public the tide may be turning against any public support for this project. The ambitions of the Broadwater Energy planners have hardened. Memories of the Exxon Valdez need to be revisited to remind us what could eventually go wrong when huge tankers are used on a day to day basis in the private sector. And with liquefied natural gas, what price are the Broadwater Energy people willing to pay? What about the Sound itself?

The public officials of the affected area have a responsibility to investigate every potential danger and the ramifications that may occur. The corporate planners will get the bonuses and the profits the Long Island Sound will get the pollution and the environmental impact of the large scale commercial activities.

The proposed study commission would consist of the county executives of Westchester, Suffolk, and Nassau, the assessors of the counties plus other appointed officials, with the idea to study the Broadwater Plan and its impacts in the greatest detail possible. All aspects are to be reviewed. Emergency responder capabilities, protection from terrorism capabilities, weather related problems and impact to existing industries like boating, fishing and tourism. Long Island Sound is not some unknown fish hole. It is lined with the some of the most exclusive real estate in the world. To have a corporation muscle in to have a profitable foothold on a newly created monopoly is a very daring and creative plan.

The question is how many of the original creators of the Broadwater Energy proposal are life long residents of the affected area? Are their first responsibilities to the profits of foreign corporations, and do they report first to the officers of these foreign corporations? The risk is on the people who will live in the affected communities even with a successful venture and, God forbid, a disaster.

That is why prudence upon prudence in studying the impact to New York State counties by the representatives of the counties is imperative and wise. There cannot be a rush to judgment on whether or not this project moves forward. At risk is the way of life as we know it. The positive is at best a short-term band aid on energy needs while making profits to an industry that is in the process or redefining the ceiling of corporate profits using the energy crisis as its cover.

Art And Habitat For Humanity

deCordova Studio & Gallery Looks To Bring Awareness To Charity

By Marisa DeMarco

Mother Teresa said, "Love begins at home, and it is not how much we do, but how much love we put in that action." This statement can be applied to the individuals involved with Habitat For Humanity. Habitat For Humanity International is a nonprofit organization that seeks to eliminate poverty housing and homelessness from the world, in the creation of decent shelter through conscience and action.

In hope to support and bring about awareness regarding both Habitat For Humanity of Peconic and Suffolk, deCordova Studio & Gallery presents a charitable exhibition, "Habitats," from May 26 through June 24, featuring diverse works of sixteen artists. deCordova Studio & Gallery goes beyond the scope of celebrating works of art and focuses to promote causes on the East End. Established by Hector and Joyce deCordova in August 2006, the gallery presents artists of quality. Additionally, the husband and wife team believe it's crucial to have a strong sense of community involvement.

Joyce deCordova commends Habitat For Humanity on the East End as the organizations not only construct homes for those in need, but continue to provide support and counseling—as an ongoing commitment. Fortunate to have an outpouring of artists, "Habitats" exhibition provides a diverse showing of works including oil, acrylic, and watercolor paintings, and digital photography. deCordova explains, "There is a broad range of subject matter. Being that people have diverse taste, there's something for everyone." Expect to see landscapes, florals, portraits, and scenes of the East End, along with works that evoke emotion. A curatorial "theme" was eliminated for this exhibition, as the artists were able to create works of their choosing.

Unable to pinpoint a specific exhibition highlight, deCordova expresses sincere respect for the exhibiting artists and their works of passion. "We have a lot here, it's all so wonderful. One piece that makes me happy is a painting by Josef Head. It looks like a Botero—it's of a bride, heavy and distorted, and entitled, I'm Getting A Little Too Old For This Sort of Thing." deCordova also references the beauty of Helen Gioquinto's watercolors and Tom Steele's emotional photography.

As for the proceeds of the benefit, 40% of the sale goes to the artist, 30% to the gallery, and 30% to Habitat For Humanity. The artists thoughtfully priced the artwork, ranging from $200 - $1,200 for the cause. With various payment options, MasterCard and Visa are accepted along with cash and check. Equally, donations for Habitat For Humanity are greatly appreciated.

deCordova remarks, "What are we here for if we can't give back? My life would be empty." We should all take this idea to heart and come out to support the "Habitats" exhibition. Let's open our hearts, minds, and wallets to help others while enjoying the powerful impact of art.

deCordova Studio & Gallery is open to the public sans entrance fee Friday, 3-7 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 12 – 6 p.m. It's located at 538 Main Street in Greenport on the beautiful North Fork. For additional information, please call the gallery at 631-477-0620.

Stonewalls Restaurant

The Woods Golf Course
967 Reeves Avenue
Riverhead

If you sat down to write a menu for a great meal it probably would go something like this.

Take a dining room with great ambience and beautiful views, blend with friendly and efficient service. Add food expertly prepared from the freshest ingredients and plated to provide visual as well as taste pleasures. This recipe, somewhat imperfectly, sums up the experiences we have always enjoyed at Stonewalls over the last four years that it has been open with Guy Peuch as the the Executive Chef. The dining room is the epitome of casual elegance, the views over the impeccably groomed golf course are stunning, and the service matches the very high quality of Guy's cuisine.

Tom Connor has been at Stonewalls since it opened, and has progressed from starting as a waiter to now being the Restaurant Manager, a great example of the rewards of hard work and enthusiasm. He went through the tasting menu that Guy had selected for us. After a taster of one of Guy's famed crab cakes, here served as an amuse, we started with Billi-Bi, a classic Breton mussel soup. This soup was to die for! Plump mussels in a saffron cream sauce that immediately reminded us of Guy's expertise as a saucier. The texture and flavor of the soup was enough to make us amateur cooks gnash our teeth and wonder at its simple perfection.

If this is on the menu then go for it and savor a wonderful culinary experience. Asparagus from Wells Farm here on Long Island had a depth of taste that you never get in store bought vegetables and the stuffed homemade Mozzarella I am sure was extremely good but I have to admit to not being a lover of this cheese. The soft shell crab came beautifully wrapped in a wafer thin crepe, and if you have ever tried to make crepes you will understand the degrée of difficulty in doing this. Another example of the gulf between a top chef and amateurs! Then came, for me, probably the highlight of the evening. A superb piece of halibut with a crispy tangy mustard hazelnut crust served with a Mediterranean style méélange of lima beans and black olives, paired with perfect whipped mashed potatoes - an incredible blend of tastes with nothing overwhelming the inherent delicacy and purity of the fish.

For the meat dishes, we sampled perfectly cooked juicy lamb chops that came with pommes gaufrettes, delicate lattice cut deep fried potatoes that for a potato lover like me were totally addictive. If Guy wants a sideline I would suggest he bags them and offers them for sale. Duck breast with a delicate pepper sauce arrived cooked to perfection accompanied by fingerling potatoes and shitake mushrooms. This was another dish that I would look forward to ordering again.

When it came to dessert, we saw again the virtues of simplicity. A warm chocolate tart was smooth and not excessive and the poached Bosc pear in vanilla syrup with maple syrup gelato and caramel sauce was a perfect end to a great meal.

During the evening we tasted some of the wines available by the glass and they were uniformly extremely good quality and well priced. These are wines that do full justice to the quality of the food, for example the newly added 2003 Chateau Heyrauds Bordeaux, the Jamesport Sauvignon Blanc and thee Domaine D'Oliver Chardonnay from the Languedoc region of France all complemented the dishes extremely well.

Stonewalls is open for lunch and dinner every day except they are closed for dinner on Tuesday. On Sunday they offer a served brunch for $24.75, including a glass of wine. A prix fixe lunch for $18 is available Monday through Saturday and the prix fixe dinner at $29.50 on Wednesday through Monday.

Going back to my opening points about the needed ingredients for a perfect meal, it is hard to fault Stonewalls in any respect. Guy Peuch puts so much care and devotion into preparing dishes that are classically correct and beautifully plated. Do not look for fusion style cuisine here. This is classic French cuisine that is not heavy but which produces such beautiful tastes that you will continue to enthuse about your meal long after you have returned home - just as we did. Stonewalls rates as one of the very best restaurants on Long Island. If you love really good food this must be one of your top choices. Four years old and going strong - with many more great years ahead.

OVER THE BARREL...

Impressions from Brooklyn Uncorked

You probably missed it, but on May 16, our local wines invaded Brooklyn. "Brooklyn Uncorked," organized by the Long Island Wine Council, Edible East End and Edible Brooklyn, offered Brooklynites (and Manhattanites really) the unrivaled—and long overdue—chance to taste Long Island wines without trudging out to the East End.

Thirty-plus wineries and a few other vendors descended on the Brooklyn Academy of Muic's BAMcafe for a walk-around tasting event. I was lucky enough to attend the press and trade portion of the event. The crowd wasn't huge, but it was steady and it seemed like people were really enjoying the wines in general. I didn't stick around for the public portion, but I've heard that it got pretty crowded, but that attendees were even more interested in the wines than the 'professionals' which, in the end, is all that matters right. Long Island wineries need to reach the end consumer first and foremost.

Overall, it can only be considered a successful event and here are some impression I came away with—both good and bad.

There just wasn't enough food available. The size of BAMcafe, may be been a constraint here, but when people are tasting a couple hundred wines in just a couple of hours, having a little cheese, some just-shucked oysters and some wine sorbet (more on that in a moment) just isn't enough. I'm not suggesting that this turn into the old Windows on Long Island event in Manhattan where the winery-to-restaurant ratio was nearly one to one, but a little more sustenance would have gone a long way—especially given the quality of the restaurants and food vendors in Brooklyn.

You've got to try Wine Cellar Sorbets. Until this event, I had only just heard about this Brooklyn-based dessert maker. They use real wine—riesling from the Hudson Valley, California Cabernet Sauvignon and Spanish Rioja, among others—to create what they call "The Adult Dessert for Sophisticatd Palates." My favorites were the Riesling and the Sangria Rojo. Serve the rose, Riesling or pinot noir flavors at your next "local" dinner party. All three are made with New York state wine. For more information, to order online and to find a local retailer, visit www.winecellarsorbet.com

More wineries should have poured their best wines. I was surprised that a couple wineries didn't participate at all, but was even more surprised—and disappointed—that some of the wineries in attendance didn't pour many, if any, of their best bottles. I understand that wine costs money, but these types of events—which don't happen more than once or twice a year—are our region's best chance to "hook" new palates on the wines. Don't show up with just your second-label wines. Bring your best and really represent the region as best you can.

Long Island wine still impressed. In no particular order, these wines the 2005 merlots from Bedell Cellars, the 2006 Scuttlehole Chardonnay and 2006 Rosati di Merlot from Channing Daughters Winery, Macari Vineyard's 2006 Sauvignon Blanc, Paumanok's always-great 2006 Semi-Dry Riesling, Scarola Vineyards' 2004 Chardonnay, both the 2006 Sauvignon Blanc and 2004 Cabernet Franc from Jamesport Vineyards, Waters Crest Winery's 2004 Merlot Reserve, and Shinn Estate Vineyard's Rose and First Fruit stood out for me on this night.

Hopefully Brooklyn Uncorked becomes an annual event...maybe in a bigger space (the event sold out easily) with more vittles next year. Long Island needs events like these to start dominating its own back yard.

Cowgirl Up!

If you have been following this column for the past couple of weeks, you might have surmised that the horse I ride is not quite the 17.3hh Warmblood jumper usually spotted at the local shows. At just over 15hh – with shoes on – my little Tobiano paint, Oreo, could pass for a large pony and sports an eight-inch brand on his flank that looks like a "G" with a Texas Longhorn rack attached to it. He's as fast as a thoroughbred and can turn on a dime – he never stumbles or slips, but unlike most jumpers, when you relax back in the saddle, he goes even faster, practically breaking the sound barrier as he tries to shorten his stride so he can go as fast as he wants and still fit in the strides that I want in between fences.

If you haven't already guessed it, Oreo is not a seasoned jumper. He is, in fact, a crossover from the West. For the past eight years, Oreo spent his days racing around barrels, learning how to turn on a dime without losing speed and drop his shoulder to avoid falling over while spinning around barrels at a breakneck pace. So how does such a neat little barrel racer like Oreo find himself on Long Island? The answer is, of course, a horse dealer. However, there's more to it than that. Although the Hunter/Jumper, Dressage and Polo scenes have taken over the Hamptons horse scene, there is a legion of Western riders out here, barrel racing, team penning and living it up, cowgirl style.

Once I learned Oreo's background, I wanted to know more. The National Barrel Horse Association has a great website, www.NBHA.com, with all the information a city slicker like me needs to figure out whether barrel racing is something I'd like to watch or compete in.

Judging from the pictures, the fact that Oreo is absolutely gorgeous is not surprising. More streamlined and athletic than other Western horses, the best barrel racers are lean, glossy and rippling with muscles. The horses are usually Paints, Arabians or Quarter horses, but all breeds are welcome to compete in open classes. Both men and women compete in barrel racing and most races have a purse (yes, they actually pay you for winning, even at the lowest amateur levels). The course is always the same – three, 55-pound closed-top barrels are arranged in a triangular pattern in the ring, called a "cloverleaf," with sstandard distances between barrels. Riders choose whether to circle around the right or left barrel first and proceed through the course as quickly as possible. There are no judges to impress, only the crowd and the clock. Similar to jumping, penalty points are given when a horse hits or tips over a barrel.

Like other competitive horse sports, a barrel racing team must be in tune with each other and share an enormous amount of trust. These horses and riders accomplish seemingly impossible turns at full speed – they must communicate if they are going to leave the arena as winners. If this sounds like fun to you, don't be fooled by barrel racing's western origins. Barrel competitions are held on Long Island all the time and there are plenty of barns out here that can show you the ropes. Take a Hike with Ken Kindler

John Virgilio and I have been leading hikes in The Sarnoff Preserve every first and third Saturday of the month since last winter. The first couple weeks of spring were cold and damp. The buds on the trees refused to open and the ground was moist and soft underfoot. Then, suddenly, the temperature shot up, rain stopped falling, buds burst open and the ground dried up. Last week, it hadn't rained for a week and it was 25 degrees warmer. John and I found ourselves in a much changed woods. It was normal to see some plants with brand new leaves already wilting when it had rained heavily only a week ago – the thin layer of Pine Barrens soil atop sand doesn't hold moisture well. What was odd was that many of the oak trees had failed to sprout leaves, and, in many places, where the brush layer should be thriving because of the missing canopy, it had not leafed-out.

We parked at the Spinney Road Parking area off Route 24 in Flanders and followed the faded yellow blazes from behind the kiosk to Owl Pond. At the Pond the yellow trail forms a T intersection with the Paumanok Path. We turned to the right, east, towards Maple Swamp and Pleasure Drive. We were refreshing the much-faded white rectangular PP blazes with paint. As we moved away from the wetlands near Owl Pond, we began to notice that many of the trees with the faded blazes were dead. This is strange. Normally you don't paint blazes on dead trees because they won't be there long. Looking up at the canopy, the few trees that had recently leafed-out bore mute testimony to the surrounding devastation. Perhaps several years of heavy gypsy moth and oak worm infestation have caused the die-off. The pitch pine trees are thriving. In fact, many of the oak trees that survived are surrounded by pine trees. The trail crackles underfoot and in many places, there was no canopy to protect us from the sun. During the early spring John and I had discovered that the brush hadn't grown into this segment of trail, so we started preparing it for summer hikes when ticks would become an issue further west in the Sarnoff Preserve. This trail needs only a little trimming and blazing. However, the brush has closed in on long segments of the DEC trails by CR104. The PP and yellow access trail are closed in and the red and blue loops have long segments of trail where the sides of the trail are touching. This has happened despite several large volunteer trail trimming initiatives facilitated in this area last year by the Pine Barrens Society.

Now, you can't even tell that 35 energetic volunteers had worked to clear the trails on two separate occasions. Until we figure out how to open up these trails again, I would suggest that, unless you are knowledgeable about tick protection, stay off them.

One walk you might like to take, where there is less of a tick threat, is along the Point Woods Trail. I took this hike last week with the East Hampton Trails Preservation Society and was once again impressed by their maintenance crew. The bridges that had become warped and dangerous have all been replaced with solid, safe structures. Even if this were not one of the prettiest trails on Long Island, it would still be worth visiting, just to see the handiwork of this trail group. To access this segment of the PP, park on Camp Hero Road in Montauk, the last public road off Route 27 before reaching the Montauk Lighthouse. Take Montauk Highway east through Montauk Village, past Theodore Roosevelt County Park, Deep Hollow Ranch and the Oyster Pond overlook (on right). The first right after the overlook is Camp Hero Road (1.5 miles east of the entrance to T. Roosevelt County Park). The trail begins on the right side of Camp Hero Road, 100 yards south of the intersection with Route 27. Park on the road shoulder by the "Point Woods Trail" sign. Walk the short access trail to the PP, a left turn over a bridge takes you along the Point Woods Trail, through Camp Hero, then along the bluffs to the Lighthouse. If you turn left, the PP crosses Route 27 to the Seal Haulout Trail. The State and EHTPS have done a great job of blazing these easy-to-follow trails. The only confusing place is where the PP crosses the highway, crossing in either direction, the opening to the trail on the other side of the road is set off to the right. This trail is clear of brush, so I didn't pick up any ticks.

Ken Kindler is a Trails and Open Space Advocate working to help the trails groups and land managers care for our "Natural Island." If you would like to learn more about our trails or help care for them, visit the Hiking Long Island website. www.hike-li.org

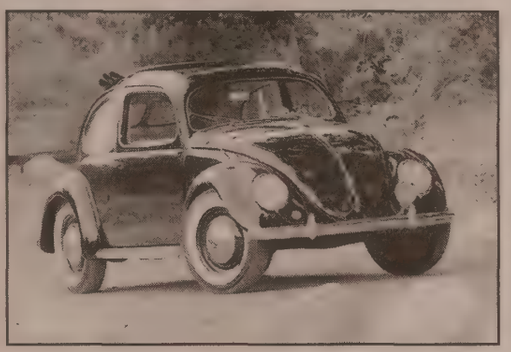

Classic Cars With Bob Gelber

Okay, so you want to save gas. Let's step back into the past when a gallon of gas cost less than 50 cents and cars got pretty good fuel mileage. In the forties and fifties most American cars achieved mileage between 20 and 25 miles per gallon. Mid-twentieth century vehicles were lighter than today's automobiles and in most cases had much smaller and less powerful engines. Obviously, the more horsepower an engine has, the more feed it needs.

Even the economy cars of the fifties, the air-cooled German Volkswagen Beetle, the French Renault Dauphine and the original British Mini, achieved only about 35 miles per gallon, which by today's standards is not exceptional, but was quite good in an era of cheap fuel. However, these three European vehicles had, by American standards, really small, low horsepower motors. Yet all of them would merrily cruise down any highway in the world at acceptable speeds.

Of them all, the Volkswagen was the most mechanically interesting. With its air-cooled, 43 horsepower 1300 cubic centimeter engine (one eighth the size of a big block Chevy V-8) mounted in the rear, the Beetle's top speed of 72 miles per hour was also considered its cruising speed. It was quite common to drive an early Volkswagen with the pedal to the metal most of the time. As everyone knows, this car was destined to become one of the best selling cars the world has ever seen.

Fast forward to today. Gas prices in America have reached all time highs. Most of our cars get worse gas mileage than those we drove 50 years ago. So what is the government and Detroit doing to get us out of this dilemma? Virtually nothing. The proposed government mandated fuel mileage rules are a joke, and Detroit, which is virtually on a self destruction mode, is still running expensive network television commercials proudly proclaiming how great their high horsepower, oversized and overweight vehicles perform. The American car buying public has pulled a Rhett Butler on Detroit with a "Frankly my dear, I don't give a damn" attitude toward their products. To save itself, what Detroit needs ASAP are high-mileage, extremely fuel-efficient products.

Even though I like small cars, I've come to the realization that most Americans like big things. In fact, we're the only country in the world that likes big vehicles. There are two obvious ways to give big vehicles better gas mileage – lightweight and smaller engines. Why does an SUV need 260 horsepower and a top speed of over 100 miles per hour in the states, where the speed limits on most of our highways are posted so artificially low that it forces every American driver to be a scofflaw? Our large cars can be designed smaller, with almost the same interior volume and made much lighter. Then a much smaller engine that would consume less fuel could power them.

Hybrid and electric power for automobiles is good, but complicated and expensive. There is another form of propulsion that was invented over 100 years ago that is a better solution to our fuel consumption woes. It's the simple diesel engine. If ever the time was right for diesels in America it is now. In city traffic, a diesel engine will get about 40 percent better fuel economy but on the highway expect about 15 percent. Diesel fuel is also cheaper to produce than gasoline because it is less refined. In fact, home heating oil and Jet A fuel used for jet planes is essentially the same as diesel fuel. In case of an accident and fire, diesel fuel is much safer than gasoline because it is considerably less explosive. Just recently, the United States Navy banned carrying all gasoline on its warships and the Navy Seals will be using special diesel powered outboards on their inflatables. Rudolf Diesel was indeed prescient.

Diesel motors work long, hard and well, especially in large vehicles. Every, and I do mean every, large over the highway truck is diesel powered. A well-built tractor-trailer rig purchased new usually comes with a 500,000-mile engine warranty. Some manufacturers of diesel truck rigs offer million mile engine warranties. I have a little 28 horsepower three cylinder diesel engine in my sailboat that should run trouble free for 10,000 hours, using one half gallon of fuel per hour. That's the equivalent of a million miles. Diesels have a stellar reputation for a long life. An immediate fix for Detroit is to offer diesel power in all large cars and SUVs. The timing is right. Fifty percent of all the cars sold in Europe are diesel powered. It can happen here. With diesel vehicles in GM's inventory, future television commercials might feature a nouveau Dinah Shore singing, "Save the USA in your Chevrolet, America is asking you to call."

EAST END KID:
BABY BUGGY BASH

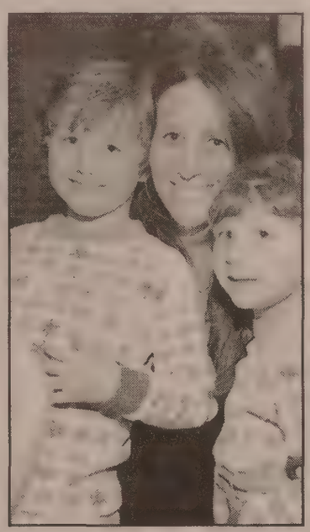

By Emily Hart Post
With a little help from Katlean de Monchy and David Post

Mom, Dad and I went to the Baby Buggy party near Dad's office the other night. I know Sasha – her mom Jessica is the person who made Baby Buggy into a big success and, of course, you know her dad. A lot of Sasha's friends were there with their parents, too. We got to the party where there were giant sized balloons outside. We walked in and then took a Thomas Train up to the food and entertainment. After the eats my school friends and I went to the back to hear the live music stopping at beds along the way for a little jumping like monkeys. We listened to Dan Zanes sing from our special spot – a bed near the singer. Then, I ran down to be in the front to see one of my favorites, Magic Al, do his show. He was so funny. The party was to promote Project Safe Sleep, which gives cribs and bassinets to new moms who don't have a lot of money. Baby Buggy helps moms and their kids all around New York City – isn't that cool? Oh, I was wearing my Chinese pajamas, which must have looked funny when we were walking to the party.

JUST FOR KIDS

CMEE's "Wild About Plants"

"Wild about Plants" is the newest featured exhibit at the Children's Museum of the East End (CMEE) and it really lives up to it's name – it's a truly "wild" exhibit. Heading through the doors of the museum, my husband, 3-year-old son and I all felt like we were entering a child's dream. The interactive exhibits were colorful, informative and fun.

If you have ever asked the question, "What is that tree thinking," the "Listen Up" exhibit will give you an answer. It gives children a chance to "be a tree" by writing how they feel and what a tree might say. With the quote, "Kids have told me how they think trees feel, if you were a tree what would you say," children are provided with paper and pen and can complete a drawing, write a poem or share their feelings about nature. My son wanted to know why trees don't wear coats in the winter. It is a good question and the exhibit provided the answers.

We loved the pen and paper idea of writing down thoughts and we were told that there was an opportunity for the children to make a journal in the art room. This was so much fun and we met up with Melissa Wilmott and her two beautiful daughters. Directions were clearly written on the table and all materials were provided. The garden journal was adorable when assembled and my son proudly used his the rest of the visit.

With journal in hand, we headed back into the exhibit. We wanted to try to answer our son's question and stopped at the "Look Closely at the Wood" display. My son looked at the inside of a tree stump and we were able to explain about the grains, growth rings and knots within the wood. We learned that rings are uneven if a tree is in an area with high winds and we were able to show my son the layers of bark and answer the question, why doesn't a tree need a winter coat? He stopped, sat down and drew a picture of a tree in his journal.

We stopped next at the "Design your own plant" display, which teaches children about the parts of the plant and their functions. Soon I heard "mommy come quick." Thinking injury, disaster, displays knocked over by an exuberant 3-year-old, I hurried over to where the voice was coming from to be pleasantly surprised to see my son in the puppet theater putting on a show about plants for his dad. He wanted me to see.

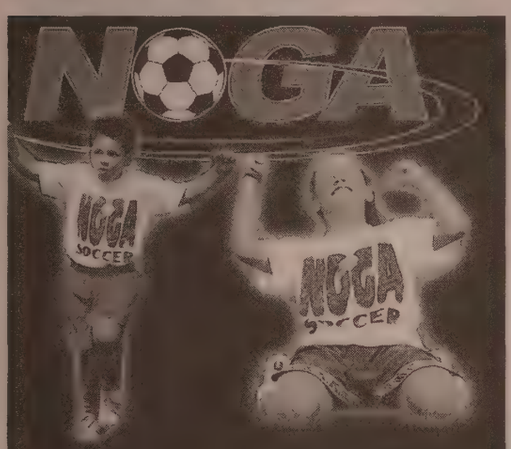

This display was a lot of fun. Children are provided with puppet characters and given a laminated script that is really great for the older child who reads. Your younger child can just have fun putting on a show and it's a great time for you to sit on the provided bench and take a break. Soon a birthday party arrived with boundless energy and we moved on to give them their turn in the puppet theater.

Our last stop was the Interactive Kitchen display. This display provided food products for the children to sort into categories, whether they are from the plants fruit, leaves, root or stem. My son drew a carrot in his journal and proudly yelled out "root" when he was done. Then quickly announced that he was "hungry, hungry, hungry."

All too soon our time was over, but you can bet that we'll be heading back.

Secrets to Beautiful Skin Without Surgery

Let's face it – you're looking older than you'd like and you're not happy about it. And with summer just around the corner you're more worried then ever about looking your best. Sure, diet and exercise has given you more energy and you feel healthier. But nothing has helped fix your sagging jowls, crow's feet, age spots and cellulite.

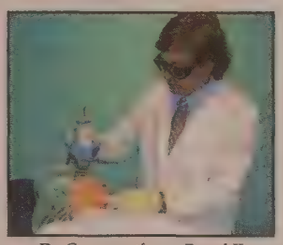

And you're not alone. Fortunately, with today's innovations in non-surgical cosmetic treatments, you can have firmer, younger looking skin safely and without the pain and downtime associated with surgical procedures.

One of the latest breakthroughs is the Fraxel II Laser Treatment. FDA approved for skin resurfacing, wrinkles, age spots, sun damage, melasma, and acne scars Fraxel II dramatically improves the appearance of aging skin without the downtime and risks of traditional abrasive treatments.

To understand how the Fraxel II Laser Treatment works, think of a digital photograph in need of touch-up. Just as a photographic image is altered, pixel-by-pixel, the Fraxel II Laser improves your appearance by affecting only a fraction of your skin at a time with thousands of microscopic laser spots. It's like digital photo-editing software for your skin!

"This unique 'fractional' approach is a huge step forward in providing significant cosmetic results with no downtime," says Dr. Alexander Covey, Medical Director of East End Laser Care and one of the first physicians in the country to offer the Fraxel II Laser Treatment. "And because the procedure does not "ablate" or remove the outer skin layer, my patients love that they can resume routine activities right after treatment."

"I take better care of myself now as a 50-year-old than I did when I was 30 but my face didn't look it," explains Eileen Priviot of Quogue. "I had brown spots from my sun-worshipping days and crow's feet around my eyes. Dr. Covey used Fraxel II on my face and the brown spots and wrinkles disappeared. My skin is the smoothest that it has ever been."

Dr. Covey performs Fraxel II Laser Treatment

Another recent breakthrough came this spring with the new Thermage NXT, the most technologically advanced Thermage machine to date. Now this safe popular treatment that non-surgical lifts and tightens skin on your face and body including your eyes, jowls, neck, legs, arms, hands, and tummy can be performed more comfortably and in less time.

Dr. Marianne Rogers, a 40-year-old public health specialist and lecturer from England wanted to use Thermage to revive her tired and listless look. She came all the way to New York to see Dr. Covey and explained, "I don't feel that old but my eyes were letting me down. I came in for Thermage to lift and rejuvenate my eyelids and upper eyebrow area helping me look as young as I feel."

"Everyone's skin is unique," says Dr. Covey. "To age gracefully while maintaining a natural youthful look, you want treatments that can be tailored to fit your exact need. Non-surgical cosmetic treatments do this."

And many agree with him. In fact, according to the American Academy of Cosmetic surgery, of the 1.2 million people who had cosmetic procedures in 2006, 66% of them were non-surgical. Top non-surgical procedures included Botox, Restylane and Laser Resurfacing to name a few.

Other popular effective treatments include Intense Pulsed Light (IPL) and other laser treatments to eliminate brown spots, face and neck redness, broken capillaries, acne, acne scarring and unwanted hair; recently FDA approved dermal fillers Radiesse, Juvederm and Perlane; and LipoDissolve and Mesotherapy for fat and cellulite reduction.

Diane Grinere, a 49-year-old real estate agent from Shirley used Mesotherapy to correct an area of her body she couldn't fix on her own. She says, "I always had a problem with love handles. My jeans pushed all my fat into my middle. After Mesotherapy with Dr. Covey, I lost 8 inches and 10 pounds and the 10-minute treatments were easy."

Skin deep with Samantha Altea

Beach Head

A few weeks ago I discovered my new favorite hairdressers – Suite 303 at Hotel Chelsea in Downtown Manhattan. They were recommended by a friend and as a beauty writer I'm always looking for a new opinion and a different take on all things beauty related. So after getting a fabulous summer haircut, I decided to interview Nacki, my stylist, and April Barton, the owner of Suite 303. My thinking was that even though they're not available in the Hamptons, they could impart their wisdom to my readers. Then what do you know, half way through the interview, April told me something that might just rock your world – if you're anywhere near Montauk from June on, you could be tempted to cheat on your year-round hairdresser, just for a moment. Some of the guys and gals who normally work in Manhattan at Suite 303 will be making special appearances at the surfer's pit only feet away from the beach called Ditch Plains. Yes, you may actually see hair flying as surfers and bathers leave the water. April says she loves to work with hair straight from the ocean.

But in the interest of sharing their knowledge , these are some tips and trends to keep in mind while you're at the beach this summer.

Before the summer kicks off, get a good haircut so that old damaged tresses don't take more of a beating. Some subtle summer highlights will lighten and evolve as the summer continues and aren't a major commitment and worth investing in early on. The sea, according to April, is like Jekyll and Hyde – the minerals and oils found in the ocean are amazing for our hair, but one should never let sea-drenched hair dry out. If you do, douse your locks with a conditioning product, such as Well Being by Davines, so that it remains saturated until you eventually wash your hair. Keep spray conditioners in your beach bag at all times.

For a big night out try using the texture of salt and sea water and add extra products and paste to create "big" hair – a fun trend this season that's easy to create after a day at the beach. Try After Beach Paste, also by Davines.

If you don't have the time or energy to wash your hair after a hard day lying at the beach, or your housemates beat you to the shower and are now all waiting for you to get ready, bring along some dry shampoo. Not recommended for use on a regular basis, but certainly great for a quick fix and some extra zing to your 'do.

Another trend this season is the permanent wave. Far from your grandmother's perm, these treatments have evolved and look natural. I'm yet to be convinced myself, but that's what the experts tell me, so it's worth investigating.

If you're not game for a perm because, after all, a perm is PERManent, than invest in heated rollers for a loose, curled sexy look. Big hair is in!

For men, forget the longhaired beach bum look. The new surfer look is slick and classic. The 1950s chic surfer is the trend this season. Think Darren from I Dream of Genie. Ladies are also channeling the same era with high ponytails, hair scarves, headbands and other hair accessories. Additionally, polka dots are popular, too.

Which brings me back to that summer fling that you're already pondering. Even if you're the loyal type and not up for two-timing, the 303 family still urges you to bring scarves, hats and accessories to the beach and they'll happily create a look for you, free of charge and just for fun. So don't be shy, urges April, who's all about sharing her skills while hanging at the beach.

Who knew you could get a new 'do and a tan, too!

For more information call (212) 633-1011. Nacki will also be making special summer appearances at Salon M in East Hampton.

Come Hither Hues

Everyone talks about "sandal season," and, no doubt, nail salon patronage skyrockets during the first few weeks of summer. But standing in a crowded cocktail lounge, it is not, in fact, your toes that get you noticed. Now, I'm not at all dismissing the benefits of a good restorative pedicure, for nothing destroys the debut of a new pair of Louboutins than – dare I say – cracked heels. But a new acquaintance is far more likely to notice the impeccable delicacy of your hands, be it a delicious young man at a poolside bar or a lady of leisure at the country club. And while we seem to care for our fingernails throughout the winter months, with routine cuticle care and subtle coats of clear polish, come summer our toes get all the TLC, with regular buffing, massaging and colors that would make a garden look dull.

It's time to shake it up a bit and start flaunting your fingers with eye-catching, come-hither red. Perhaps it is because a red nail polish required mother's permission (or expertise) as a child, but there is still something undeniably daring about having red nails. And what better time to try it than as a topcoat to the dress you've been saving for this weekend's (third) summer kick-off soirée.

Which was my thought exactly when planning my own little bash. Well, not exactly. When proudly presenting a colleague with a preview of the dress I had finally selected for my event, she asked, "Are you going to paint your nails bright red like the model in the picture?" Bashfully admitting to my fashion-futuristic friend that I had not really considered the detail, I referred back to the mental note I had made during the first month of our acquaintance – do whatever this woman says. Agreeing that red nails would indeed compliment my "look at me" yellow dress, I scheduled a manicure into my day of party prepping.

Now, the last time I dabbled in the red arts – on my toes, which is best for a test run – I was sunbathing on my allotted 25 Euro chaise in Cannes, when I was informed by a robust Italian gentleman cozying up to me that he had known since the moment he saw me that I could not possibly be French because I was wearing red nail polish. Ever since then, it had been Marshmallow, a nearly white polish, and Ballet Slipper, an undetectably pinker hue, for me, pursuing a more classically chic and subtly elegant regime for both mani and pedi.

But hostessing can certainly put a dose of boldness in you and, armed with an honest friend, I went out to my local pseudo-spa to find that special shade of scarlet. Scanning the rows of bottles in search of a color akin to a pair of red satin shoes in my closet, there I found it – my color of the season. Now, ladies, the winter of Wicked is behind us, and it is time to opt for a color that is more appropriate for summer's cheerful wardrobe. For me, that color is A-List. Bright enough to stand up to a fancy yellow frock, but still deeply seductive, A-List was just the dose of cheekiness I was looking for.

However, any woman who has every experimented with an out-of-character color is all too familiar with the feeling of looking down at your hands and, like an infant, having difficulty recognizing that they are, in fact, attached to your body and not someone else's. But after owning my new nails, come Monday morning I noticed every woman around me was sporting bright shades of glowing red. Whether they were topping off a simple black skirt suit, or a breezy white dress, no doubt red fingernails had become the chosen accessory of the season.

For the fingernail forecast of the "red nail trend," the berry hues that are so popular right now will soon be heading towards a tropical, near tangerine. Now, I know that may sound a bit Boca, but these citrus shades, without crossing the line to orange, actually compliment a summer palette quite well. For those who follow the Chanel limited edition craze like a Proenza Schouler for Target dress, the new Wicked is a juicy coral called Heatwave, or try the peachier Orange Blossom. Personally, I'll be taking the tangerine turnover a little more slowly with a color Tracy Reese designed for Sally Hansen called Flame, which is sunnier than my newly beloved rich red, while still in the scarlet family.

So while some say blondes have more fun, I say it's the girls who aren't afraid to be just a little cheeky and glam it up with a show stopping manicure. But watch out, you'll be sure to start some fires.

Far from being a fad, aesthetic dentistry has moved into the mainstream of healthcare. Each year, thousands of people are visiting their dentists in order to maintain optimum health and create more attractive smiles. Cosmetic dentistry can produce a beautiful smile and so much more.

Prior to 1970, "if it ain't broke, don't fix it" was the standard of dental care received by most patients. Dentistry was a reactive profession. Dentists would focus on existing pain and ignore any other questionable symptoms. Patients became conditioned to treat only immediate problems. This mindset created future complications often resulting in tooth extractions and ultimately to false teeth. Combating the problems at earlier stages could have prevented tooth loss.

Seventy-five million American baby boomers have discovered they have failing dental health. Their desire to achieve improved physical appearance has brought countless individuals to seek the advice of cosmetic dentists. Many of these boomers are looking to rid themselves of the unsightly mercury restorations and improve their appearance and physical health. They are discovering how advanced dental care not only repairs tooth damage but also improves their looks, adds to their total wellness and may relieve chronic pain.

Today, in medicine and dentistry, advancements in technology and technique are accelerating at a faster pace. Dentists have learned new methods that require proactive approaches. Although most of us are born with structurally sound teeth, it is our own responsibility to preserve them. As we go through life, excessive wear and tear can be detrimental to retaining healthy teeth. Our teeth are exposed to sugars, acids, chewing, grinding, braces and general abuse. Periodic checkups can keep you ahead of any potential problems.

Picture your teeth traveling down the river of life. There are rocks, rapids and a waterfall waiting at the end of the river. At no point in your travels do you want to be tossed over the edge of the falls, which represents the loss of your teeth. To combat this force, we must constantly paddle upstream in order to maintain oral health longevity. Your dentist can be your captain on the river, helping you navigate away from the waterfall, ensuring you retain your beautiful smile.

Currently, dentists detect deterioration and breakdown of teeth and bones at a much earlier stage. This early awareness enables them to treat problems before they reach a critical state. One of the positive results of this proactive philosophy is a newfound realization that our teeth are connected to our total body wellness. Our overall health can positively be affected by procedures performed by your dentist. For example, restoring a worn, sunken, collapsed bite may often improve other chronic health symptoms. Some of these physical ailments, which may be eliminated from the use of advanced dental techniques, include morning headaches, neck stiffness, ear pain and various joint pains. Popping joints, clicking jaws, face and eye pain can also be relieved by procedures performed by a dentist with advanced training.

Jaw position is a delicate matter of balance. If the bite is out of alignment, jaw and facial muscles will strain and create spasms that are perceived as pain. As these muscles continue to strain, our bodies react by moving our teeth, which causes grinding and creates pain and tooth wear. An unbalanced bite is often one of the main causes of cosmetic problems. Correcting the bite is essential to insure good mouth functioning. A Rolls Royce with a smashed windshield is just as undesirable as a sparkling smile with a misaligned bite.

Finding a qualified cosmetic dentist may require some research. The dentist should have many years of postdoctoral restorative and cosmetic training.

Patients should be able to view before and after photographs of cases actually performed by the dentist. The office should be clean, organized and utilize the latest technologies such as digital x-rays, lasers, digital photography and computerization. Most importantly, the doctor and office staff should create a relaxed atmosphere giving the patients adequate time to explain their concerns and needs.

Dr. Guy A. Spinner is a graduate of New York at Buffalo Dental School, and The Las Vegas Institute for Advanced Dental Studies. He has completed over ten postdoctoral hands on courses over the last six years. He is listed on the Internet at www.leadingdentists.com and www.drspinner.com.

Shopping the Rock

One might think Shelter Island Heights has little to offer – after all, it's only a half-mile strip – but the ambience and goodies make the ferryboat trip well worth it.

A good place to start is on Bridge Street. Bliss' Department Store is a Shelter Island staple. After leaving the store the other day, my older brother mentioned how little it has changed since we first started shopping there over twenty years ago. Supersoakers and Wiffle balls no longer draw us in, but there is an excellent selection of flip-flops ranging from the relatively inexpensive and super trendy Havaianas brand to top of the line Columbia slides. There is also an extensive collection of Shelter Island paraphernalia including cup holders, backpacks, sweatshirts and the very popular Shelter Island map magnet for your car. The magnets sell for $11.95 and are plastered on nearly every resident's vehicle. While sauntering along the sunny streets over the bridge up to Grand Avenue, soak up the atmosphere that is unique to Shelter Island. Enjoy the delightful gingerbread-style architecture that the Heights is famous for, and of course, the clean, sea air of the East End.

You'll soon run into a large, pink house with elegant white trim showcasing a hidden gem of the Island, Marie Eiffel. Marie features impossibly chic linens, leathers and cottons from all over the world, sold at a reasonable prices. She has an impeccable eye for selecting items that one would ordinarily overlook and pairing them with unexpected extras, creating a look tailored specifically for you. I've received more compliments on a handmade Jadeite and gold ring I fell for at her boutique than any other piece of jewelry I've ever worn! She spends time with her patrons, pulling items off the rack that suit their personality. She pays particular attention to detail and the final touches that really "make" the outfit. Marie is a bubbly eccentric and you'll surely remember your visit and leave with fun, new clothes that you won't see other women sporting. For great women's fashion finds, her boutique is a must-stop.

Right next door is antique shop Dworkin and Daughter, known for its superior collection of antiques. The shop features authentic estate and hotel pieces from the 18th through the 21st century. Not everything screams grandiosity, however. There are plenty of charming wicker chairs and perfect tea-sets that will accent the summer place and boast that novelty appeal so coveted on Long Island.

Once you hit Grand Avenue, be sure to stop at the Pharmacy (currently undergoing renovations to restore the 1940s ice cream parlor complete with booth chairs et. al.) for a midday treat. I recommend the Root Beer floats – dieting can be quite oppressive, so don't skimp on this childhood favorite.

Large oak trees shade Grand Avenue allowing for a cool, comfortable stroll. Check out the Coastal Cottage, which offers an array of elegant furniture perfect for the beach house. You can also make an appointment to have the interior of your home decorated or have a consultation with a design expert to pick out a few must-have items for the home. Coastal Cottage is no run of the mill imitation antiques warehouse. You know those fake old beach signs? Aren't they just obnoxious? Their staff offers great ideas like collecting beach glass in large clear jars or painting interesting pieces of driftwood for a creative centerpiece.

Even if you don't end up buying anything – I find this hard to imagine – the walk will give you a feel for the unpretentious charm that separates Shelter Island from the South Fork.

Go Fish

The weather on Memorial Day weekend was good for all outdoor activities, which brought many, many boaters out on East End waters. Alas, this made the fish shy away but a few anglers were lucky.

Offshore fluking is still not strong but some keeper-sized fluke (minimum of 19.5 inches) were caught off Greenport. For inshore fishing, Ken Morse of Tight Lines Tackle, Sag Harbor, reported a seven-pound fluke weighed in at his station, and a 30-inch bass was caught by trolling at the North Haven ferry slip. There were also weakfish caught in Noyac Bay and fluke fishing was good at the Greenlawns off Shelter Island.

Steve at East End Bait and Tackle in Hampton Bays said fluke were caught in the east cut of Shinnecock Bay, with blues and bass being caught at Shinnecock inlet. According to Steve of Wego Fishing Station, Southold, the boat traffic seemed to spook the fish but some fluke of eight to ten pounds were brought in. Wego also reports striped bass of 35 to 39 pounds were caught at Plum Gut off Orient Point.

Paulie's Tackle of Montauk told us fluke are in close to the beach at the Point but no signs of bait so surf fishing for blues and bass was poor last weekend.

There is a complementary fly fishing clinic at the Sag Harbor Sailing Club on Pine Neck Avenue off Noyac Road this Sunday, June 3, from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

Going Green At The Beach

A few weeks ago at my apartment in Brooklyn, my roommates were deep in discussion about the environment and Global Warming. When asked my thoughts, I ignorantly replied, "It's not like just me alone will make any difference." This statement has haunted me ever since. That night I dreamt I was being carted off to prison to spend the rest of my days in solitary confinement, left to ponder those words for all eternity. I woke up dripping sweat, shocked and disappointed in myself. In the morning I ritually turned on "The View" – yes, this does come on at 11 a.m., I am not what you would call a "morning person." The ladies were discussing "going green" and what you can do to save the environment. Did Barbara and Rosie hear what I said yesterday, too? What a coincidence, right? Actually, it was no a coincidence at all. That day was April 22 – Earth Day. Now I felt really dumb. So, I listened to every piece of advice the ladies gave and wrote down each tip to make me a little less ignorant – I can help save the environment by making informed decisions about what I choose to buy.

At last the summer is here and I can finally take a break from my steamy Brooklyn apartment and spend time outdoors in the Hamptons at my friend's summer home. Being the fashionista that I am, I get too excited about the trends for the upcoming season – and also too excited to spend more money than I have in the bank.

My first discovery was Recycled Sail Totes. What a smart and creative idea. These tote bags are made from recycled boat sails. Each bag has an authenticity tag, which tells the life of the sail – the type of craft it guided, the type of sail it was and the seas it sailed. I couldn't think of a more perfect summer beach bag. To further reverse my ignorance, I decided to search the Internet for anything and everything that would be an eco-friendly purchase. The perfect thank you gift to my friend? A Recycled Flip-Flop Mat for the outdoor shower. These durable mats are made from the foam rubber surplus created in the production of flip-flops in sandal factories. Instead of ending up in landfills, this rubber is now made into mats.

My crusade to save the world, whilst looking fabulous in the Hamptons, became a little too daunting for me. I decided my next plan of action was to put together a flawless beach wardrobe that would include all the essentials a girl needs for the day. And if I could find something made from recycled or reused materials, I would be a happy, Earth-loving lady.

Eco-friendly bag? Check. Now, what to put in it? For my feet I choose Havaianas. They make a multitude of flip-flops in bright, bold colors, metallics and prints. These colors are carried over into sunglasses as well. I opted for a pair of Alain Mikli shades that are a bright, canary yellow acetate. To cover-up I remembered I bought an old tablecloth at a thrift store that I was going to use it as fabric to make a dress, but never got around to it. It has this beautiful blue and cream floral print and it is worn out to the perfect thinness. I wrapped it around me like a sarong and it hits just above the knee. A cover-up that is recycled and vintage is very chic for this summer season. Much to my delight, I found a company called Junglegurl who creates one of a kind bikinis constructed from vintage garments. I couldn't place my order fast enough as I took another step forward in my personal eco-battle.

Of course, what would a day at the beach be without some music for my listening pleasure? The iHome Water-Resistant Boom Box is perfect for the beach. It has MP3 speakers, protects your iPod from sand and water and charges your iPod while playing. At the end of the day, when the sun starts to set and I have achieved that bronzed tan and exhausted my limbs from frolicking in the waves, I can throw my wet bikini into the Wet Bikini Bag. This pink and green 100% cotton hand embroidered bag has a waterproof lining so I can throw it into my tote bag without getting any of my other possessions wet.

When I stroll off the beach and head back up the path to my friend's house, I will be glad to have added more "green" into my beach wardrobe. I think it needed a splash of color anyway.

The Cutting Edge for a Modern Mom

As a new mom, I wanted a hairstyle that would better suit my lifestyle, and what better way to reach this goal than get a makeover at the Vincent da Silva at Gil Ferrer Salon in Bridgehampton? The last time I got my hair cut was in August – yes, nine months ago, right before my daughter Julia was born. Since I became pregnant, my hair has become thicker, stronger and more manageable. I love the new texture and body my hair has and wanted to get a new, modern style that would be "wash and go" as Vincent da Silva called it. I brought my friend, Kelly Merritt along to share my experience and we had a great time. We were given a choice of delicious complimentary cappuccinos paired with little Italian cookies.

We were warmly greeted by Vincent and he asked questions that helped him decide what kind of cut would work best for me. I wanted a new look, something easy to style and even easier to maintain. Vincent decided to let the sides fall to my chin and layer the back. So, after my hair had received a wonderful shampoo, head massage and all, my makeover began.

Vincent began cutting inches off to get the basic shape, and as he blew out my hair he assured me, "this is only the beginning." When my hair was dry he continued to cut my hair with precision and explained to me that he prefers to cut new client's hair when it's dry to become more familiar with it. Razor-cutting provides a healthier cut, and achieves a softer look to provide natural texture. Vincent had me stand a few times to see how my hair falls. He was very attentive and considerate.

I asked Vincent who his typical clients were. He comes across many hairstyles where the top is too short and the back is too long. There is a common fear among women that they don't want their hair to be "too short," so he will adjust these styles as best as he can. He usually blends the short hair into the long, which provides great results.

My cut was almost complete when, at the last minute, Vincent suggested bangs. I agreed and I love them! This haircut can be trimmed every six-weeks to maintain the style, but it is not necessary. Although it is a modern, stylish cut, it is very low maintenance. Vincent gave me a cut that will grow out well – the layers will fall into place.

Next was the makeup. I sat in a different chair that tilted back at a slight angle in order to receive optimal lighting. What an experience. Vincent matched the colors to my complexion, and attentively applied them. It was one of the most enjoyable experiences I've had in quite awhile. I felt refreshed, relaxed, and ready for an evening out. What better way to end a hectic work week than by getting a complete makeover by from this friendly and caring stylist? It was worth every minute. If you are looking for a refreshing look for the summer or just a beautiful cut, this salon is the perfect choice.

Less Is More

Weekly magazines abound with articles on breast enlargement, liposuction or the newest facelift techniques, just as reality shows depicting plastic surgery in all its graphic glory, have become more frequent and popular, especially with the 18 to 45-year-old demographic. With close to three million surgical procedures performed in the United States in 2006, it is safe to say that cosmetic surgery is no longer the secret of the glamorous or wealthy, but a staple in the diet of a more health conscious population that simply wants to stay good-looking and young forever. So instead of another educational article on silicone implants or the weekend facelift, I would like to address the issue of excessive or overdone plastic surgery, in the hope that patients who are considering one of these procedures will rethink not only the result they seek, but how much of a change is necessary to achieve that result.

Let's start with facelifts, facial fillers and Botox. We have all seen the work done on Hollywood stars by presumably excellent surgeons, which has not only failed to restore natural beauty but has distorted a familiar face into one that is barely recognizable. I would rather hear my patient say, "Everyone thinks I look great," than, "Everyone loves the job you did." If someone knows you had a facelift, then we, as plastic surgeons, have not really done our job. A natural-looking result should leave a patient younger and refreshed without changing their facial features and certainly without telltale scars or abnormal pulling left behind.

In the same way, Botox and facial fillers should be used cautiously and conservatively to soften lines and wrinkles, not eradicate the ability to animate or respond. Barbie should be the only 60-year-old who is wrinkle free. Similarly, a fuller lip is fine if it defines and plumps the lip a little, but when the lips begin to look as if a patient has been bitten by a man-o-war, the sublime becomes the ridiculous. In short, less is more. One should look better, not different. And it is up to the patient as well as the surgeon to know when enough is enough. One sees far too many expressionless foreheads, pulled faces, mammoth cheekbones, elevated eyebrows and over-plumped lips roaming the streets.

Remember, you can always have a little more skin removed a few years down the road, or a little more filler or Botox put in a few months from now, but if too much has been done, it is often hard to reverse.

The same principles apply to breast surgery. I am seeing younger and younger patients in my practice, even some in their teens, who are unhappy with their breasts. They are too small, too droopy, too flat or too asymmetric. Many of these problems have occurred after childbirth or weight loss, but sometimes it is purely a matter of wanting larger breasts to fill out a bathing suit or special dress. For whatever reason, sociologically we have become a nation who reveres large breasts, but keep in mind the axiom that the larger the implant the greater the risk of complications and re-operation. While a surgeon can manage somehow to place a 600cc or 700cc implant into a thin A-cup woman, the appearance of rippling, malposition and a host of other problems will be that much greater. The key to a beautiful result in breast surgery is staying natural. The diameter of an implant, if used, should never be larger than the base diameter of the patient's own breast. If this means that someone starting with an A-cup might only be able to go to a full B-cup, then so be it. Trying to satisfy a patient's desire for a certain cup size or a certain volume implant is fraught with danger. Once both the patient and surgeon accept this, there will be far fewer secondary operations done to correct deformities.

I can continue and advise against excessive liposuction, fat injection, etc. but if a potential cosmetic surgery patient comes away with one point, it is that less truly is more. Seek consultation with at least two or three surgeons before deciding. Make sure the surgeon is certified by the American Board of Plastic Surgery (www.plasticsurgery.org has a list of certified plastic surgeons in your area). And by all means, stay natural!

Get Hampton Sun-Kissed

If you thought that Hamptonites like Sarah Jessica Parker, Renee Zellweger, Kelly Ripa, Denise Richards and Martha Stewart were slathering on Hawaiian Tropic sunblock at the beach last weekend, you must not have heard about Hampton Sun, the most luxurious line of summer skincare products to hit the East End in years. Hampton Sun is the result of a collaboration between a Hamptons real estate developer, a casting agent and the country's top beauty and skincare experts who all believe that modern women should have to choose between protecting their skin from the sun's harmful rays and looking, feeling and smelling beautiful.

The delightful fragrance, Privet Bloom, was the first (product) to be perfected. Privet Bloom features the breathtaking aroma of privet hedges in bloom coupled with a bouquet of muguet, jasmine, linden blossom, gardenia, orangeflower, dune rose, driftwood and sun-warmed musk. Privet Bloom is not a replacement for your favorite fragrance. Rather, it is the perfect perfume to slip into your beach bag to mist whenever you need a little pick-me-up when you're running from the beach to dinner or out to the shops.

This past Memorial Day weekend, I had the pleasure of testing out the new Hampton Sun skincare line – by land and by sea – and the products passed both tests with flying colors. I wasn't sure if all of the products could be layered and worn together, but I needed to test all of them so I gave it a try. Before donning my new bikini, I smoothed on some of the Sunless Tanning Gel. I was surprised at how the clear formula dries so quickly and smells so fresh and clean. Best of all, when my beautiful, light golden tan developed a few hours later, the natural-looking tan was completely even and my hands and feet weren't stained at all.

Once the Sunless Tanning Gel was dry, I applied the SPF 30 Sun Tanning Lotion onto my skin. The lotion was as light and freshly scented as the Sunless Tanning Gel and also dried surprisingly quickly. After a whole day in the sun and on the boat, my skin felt fresh and cool and even though I hadn't been out in the sun since last summer, I didn't burn at all.

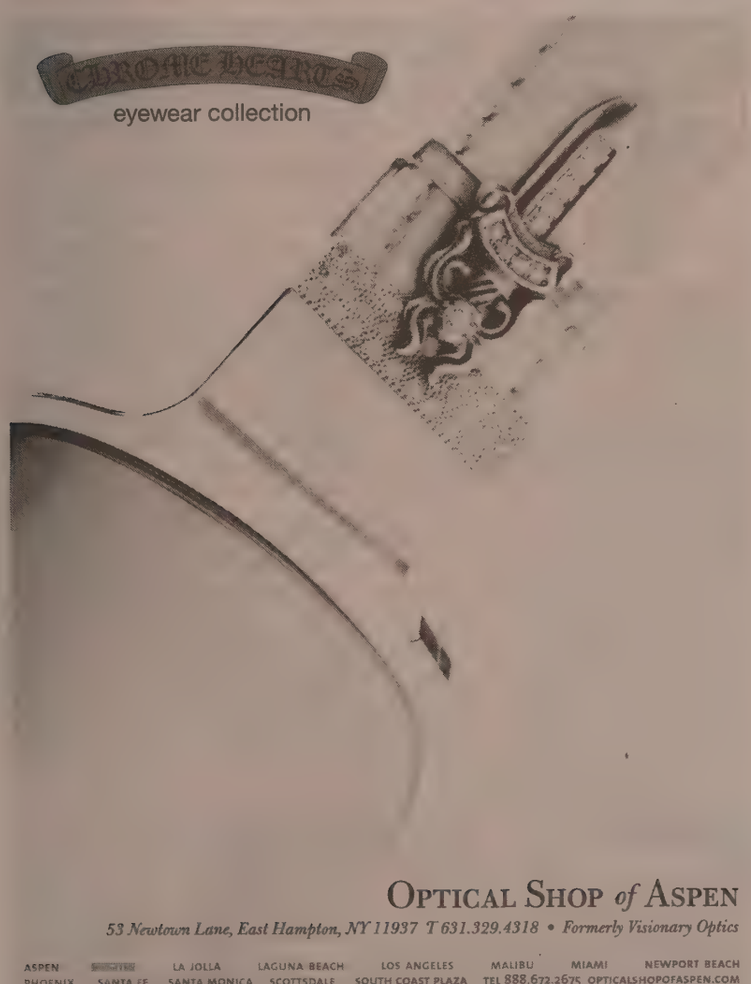

Although I didn't have a chance to use the Serious Shimmer Cooling Spray in Pearl at the beach, I spritzed some on my faux-tanned skin before heading out to the clubs that night. Not only did the cooling mist revive me during many long, hot hours of dancing – the shimmer made my skin look gorgeous. The next night, all of my friends wanted to be "shimmered" and soon, my bottle was half-empty! We put it on our faces to give our makeup a little sparkle, in our hair for that tousled, just-came-from-the-beach look and all over our limbs to make them look long, thin and tan.

I don't think I'll bring these products back to the newsroom to share with the girls – they're that good. They made my skin silky smooth and made me feel absolutely beautiful. What more could a girl ask for?

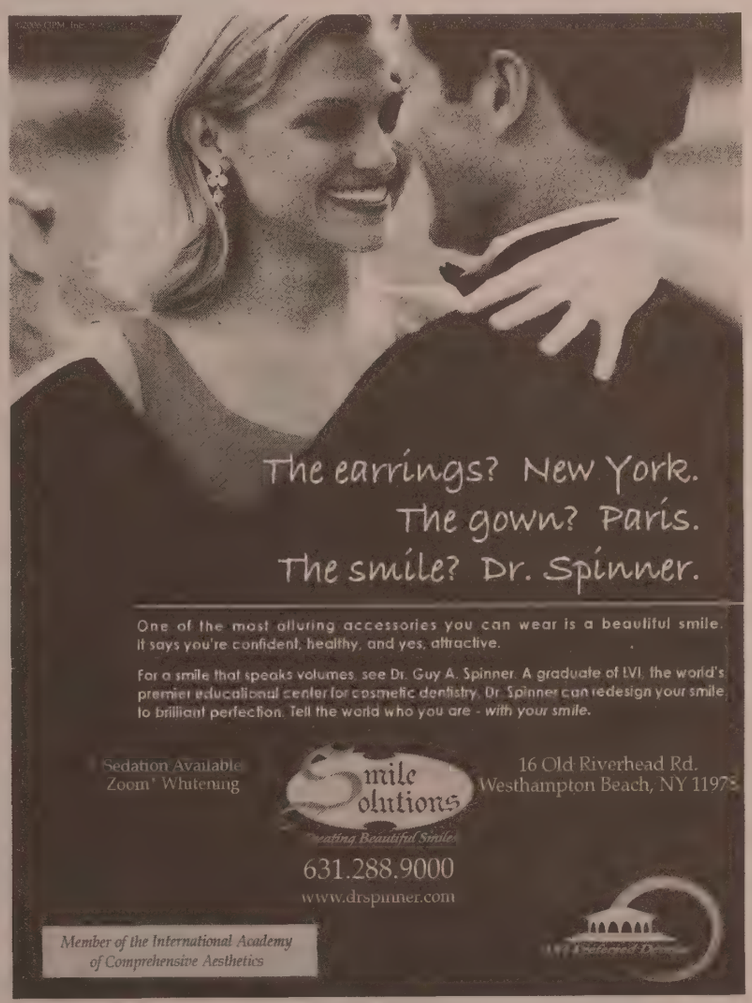

Later on in the summer, when my real tan starts to darken, I am going to try out their SPF 4, 8 and 15 Sun Tanning Gels and After Sun Moisturizer so my skin stays as soft and supple as it is now, all summer long.

If you want to try some of these products for yourself, pick some up at Henri Bendel, Fred Segal or another fine retailer or log on to www.hamptonsuncare.com.

Man-O-Pause

Menopause treatment has been around for years. But did you know that the word 'Andropause' was written and discussed in medical books dating back to the 1940s? I'll bet your father never talked about it. The difference is this: men are now living longer and have more leisure time. Men are paying more attention to their health and well-being. Medical testing for hormonal imbalances haven't really been spotlighted on men's health until quite recently and the biotechnology just wasn't sensitive enough to test and diagnose Andropause until a very short time ago.

Here's the Skinny on Andropause:

Testosterone levels drop approximately 10 percent every ten years beginning around the age of 30. Coincidentally, the level of Sex Binding Hormone Globulin, or SHBG increases. SHBG imprisons any available testosterone it can find and this prevents testosterone from going to various tissues of the body and doing its job. That leaves only a very small amount of bio available testosterone to try to do a very big job. This is what causes the symptoms of Andropause. Because this hormone is vital to the health of a male, the decreased levels of testosterone can put a man at a higher risk of health related conditions.

So What Exactly Does Testosterone Do?

Testosterone affects the male as a whole entity. Testosterone is produced in the testes and in the adrenal glands (the 'caps' over the kidneys). Testosterone is to males what estrogen is to females. Just as females require estrogen to be female (breast development, the menses, ovulation), men need testosterone to be a male (normal sexual behavior, body hair over the kidneys). Testosterone is to males what estrogen is to females. Just as females require estrogen to be female (breast development, the menses, ovulation), men need testosterone to be a male (normal sexual behavior, body hair)

Andropause: Male Menopause

Andropause is a phenomenon similar to the female menopause and is prevalent in men between the ages of 40 and 55, although there have been diagnosed cases of Andropause as early as 35 years of age. Quite often, Andropause goes undiagnosed because men do not have a cessation of menses or other signs and symptoms that women experience while going through menopause. When Andropause occurs, there is a distinct decline in the levels of the male hormone, testosterone. Changes in the level of testosterone can manifest as disruptions in energy, attitudes and moods, libido and physical agility.

Diagnosis and Treatment of Andropause with Traditional Chinese Medicine

When a male patient experiences the signs and symptoms we have already described as possible Andropause, the first question I ask is, "have you seen your primary healthcare provider?" because I want to see results of a complete physical: testosterone levels, thyroid levels, serotonin, blood counts. Further investigation and questioning of the patient will reveal lifestyle and other physiological and psychological clues as to what ails this individual. Typically, there arises a pattern or combination of patterns. For example, Spleen Qi Deficiency, which can be responsible for fatigue, combined with a Deficiency of Heart Qi can lead to depression-like symptoms. Kidney and Liver Yin Deficiency can manifest as insomnia, blurred vision, dry eyes, sudden outbursts of anger, and nocturnal emissions to name a few.

The key to successful treatment with Traditional Chinese Medicine is to discover and treat the root cause of the disease; not merely address the secondary pattern symptoms (known as the limbs). Once the root of the problem is treated, usually all other secondary complaints subside. The combination of Acupuncture and Chinese herbal formulas may successfully treat a large percentage of these types of cases.

Improve your life with Dental Implants

By Dr. HOWARD POPPER

Chances are, whether you have lost one tooth or several, whether it is a new situation or something you have lived with for years, you have never become fully accustomed to losing such a vital part of yourself.

Now you can have replacement teeth that look, feel and function like natural teeth. Advances in dental science allow your dentist to offer artificial tooth roots which fuse with the jawbone to form a secure foundation for tooth replacement.

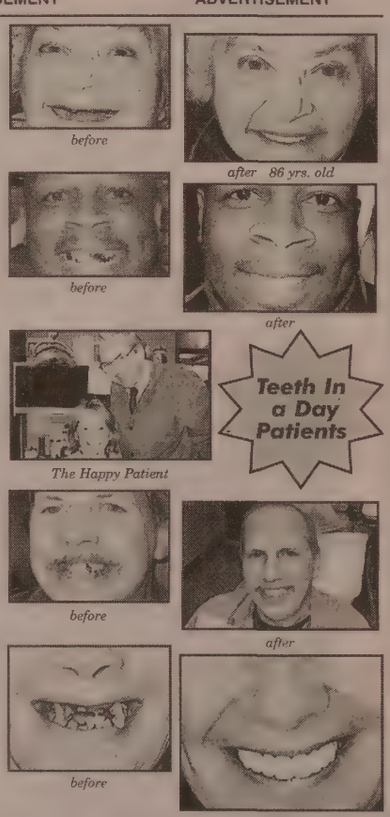

This concept for oral rehabilitation was developed by noted Swedish scientist and orthopedic surgeon Dr. Per Ingvar Branemark over forty years ago. This research opened the door to a lifetime of renewed comfort and self-confidence for hundreds of thousands of people facing tooth loss.

What happens when you lose a tooth?

If you are missing one tooth or more, you may find there are other things you miss. You may miss your natural smile. And when was the last time you crunched into an apple or sank your teeth into a mouth-watering steak? Maybe you feel self-conscious about eating or speaking in public. Perhaps your remaining teeth are shifting, or you suffer from muscle strain or headaches. Do you miss the comfort you once experienced in familiar situations at work, home, or with friends?

Naturally, the effects of tooth loss vary from person to person and depend on what has been lost. If you have lost a crown, you have lost the visible part of your tooth. If you have lost the root as well, you have lost the unseen part of your tooth and indeed the most important part. The root anchors the tooth to your jawbone providing support for the crown. Without the root, the bone around the missing tooth will gradually recede, remaining teeth will shift, and chewing will become more difficult with time.

For those who have lost all of their teeth in an upper or lower jaw, the long term problems are even greater. Because bone shrinks after tooth loss, nerves become exposed and dentures lack support. Loose fitting dentures compound problems and lead to sore gum tissue and additional pain.

Clean Mouth Better Health - The Perils of Periodontal Disease

- Periodontal disease attacks the gums and the bone supporting the teeth in the jawbones, thereby leading to loss of teeth. To eliminate gum inflammation, treatment consisting of scaling, root planing and curettage - which is essentially cleaning the teeth well - is required.
- If periodontal pockets persist, periodontal surgery may be indicated. Receding gums are another frequently overlooked problem that requires treatment; periodontal surgery can be performed to improve appearance when there is an abundance of gum tissue.
- Numerous studies have linked periodontal disease with heart disease, diabetes, low birth weight babies, pancreatic cancer, obesity and osteoporosis. Periodontal disease can be a chronic condition which requires ongoing care. Professional periodontal treatment is an investment in the health of your mouth and your overall well-being.

YOUR WEEKLY GUIDE TO FUN IN THE HAMPTONS

The Soulful Sounds of Joan Armatrading at WHBPAC

Joan Armatrading's soulful, penetrating sound has been around for a long time. I still remember listening to her at my cousin's seafood restaurant at the Montauk docks, where Lenny's Restaurant is today. Back in the summer and fall of 1984, my cousin Lexa would blast Joan Armatrading's bluesy, folksy songs all over the Montauk docks and while working in this restaurant, I would look out at the setting sun, over the boats and the water and feel so peaceful hearing this moving music. She started singing in the early 1970s and was well on her way to stardom by the mid-80s.

Lexa and I would buy each new album as it hit the charts – we liked her name, which sounded so rhythmic and different. Now, over twenty years later, she is still belting out the blues and I come to find out she is originally from the Island of St. Kitts, where I have vacationed and never realized that she was from this gorgeous seaside resort. But maybe that's why her music seems to blend so well with the sea. I also came to find out that this popular and prolific singer and songwriter will be making her East End debut at the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center on Saturday, June 9. So if we live long enough, and if they last long enough, eventually we will get to see all our favorite performers, hopefully!

I'm sure I'm not alone in being excited that Joan Armatrading is finally coming to the Hamptons, on a rare American tour and that she is still cranking out new albums and hit songs after performing for over 30 years. I was thrilled to hear that she has just come out with yet another album called Into the Blues, which was released in the U.S. on May 1. A video for the first single, "A Woman in Love," is also circulating on YouTube and similar sites. The album, which Armatrading calls "the CD I've been promising myself to write for a long time," has a strong blues-rock feel. It is her 18th album so far, in a prolific career. She made her first one in 1972, with Whatever's for Us and made her last one in 2004, Live: All the Way from America.

Working with the finest musicians, Joan Armatrading is coming to the WHB Performing Arts Center to celebrate "Into the Blues," as well as material from her stunning, 35-year career. This record burst to the top of the Billboard Blues Chart and has also landed the #2 slot on the iTunes Blues Chart. Driven by her passionate guitar, Armatrading's heartfelt music touches the listener and makes them yearn for more. Her voice is rich, soothing and haunting – her emotional sound is not easily forgotten. It is reminiscent of the melodic sounds of the Caribbean, where she was born in 1950.

Born in Basseterre, St. Kitts, Armatrading was seven years old when her family moved to Birmingham, England. Her first job was not in the music field, but working at Rabone Chesterman, makers of fine engineering tools. Ironically, Armatrading was fired from this job for bringing her guitar to work and insisting on playing during tea breaks. She moved to London in the early 1970s, to perform in a production of the popular musical "Hair," where she met her first song partner, Pam Nestor. They worked together on an album, Whatever's For Us, on the Cube label. But Cube considered Armadtrading to be more of a star, crediting her and, as a result, the two women had a falling out. In 1975, when she was free to sign for A & M, Armatrading made her next CD, Back To the Night, and then she went on to make her following top album of 1976, Joan Armatrading and a hit single, Love and Affection. In this album, she infused some jazz-influenced material, which she also incorporated into future albums, like Show Some Emotion. Some more hit songs came along, including "Willow," "Down to Zero," and "Kissin' and a Huggin." Armatrading gained a new audience for her writing and performing with "The Flight of the Wild Geese," which was used during the opening and end titles for the 1976 war film, The Wild Geese.

In 1980, she reinvented her playing style and released her next CD, called Me, Myself and I, a harder, pop-oriented album produced by Richard Gottehrer. This same pop style was also noticeable in her next albums, Walk under Ladders (1981) and The Key (1983). Armadtrading made a "vocal cameo" appearance on the 1986 Queen album, A Kind of Magic. One of the secrets to her success has been her ability and desire to constantly reinvent herself, to incorporate different styles of folk, rock, pop, jazz, reggae and blues over decades. Her other biggest hit singles were "Me, Myself and I," and "Drop the Pilot."

Armatrading has been nominated twice as Best Female Vocalist for the Brit awards and also nominated twice for the American Grammy Award of Best Female Vocalist. Along with numerous platinum, gold and silver albums and consistent, enviable critical acclaim, she was also been nominated as one of the 100 Most Influential Women in Rock in a 1999 VH1 poll. So don't miss this exciting opportunity to see her live on the stage of WHB Performing Arts Center on June 9 at 8 p.m.

review: things being what they are...by jan silver

Bay Street Theatre in Sag Harbor just opened its Mainstage summer season with Wendy MacLeod's comedy Things Being What They Are. It is a brief, intense commentary on the basic human need for love and connection, and most of the biting dialogue is right on target.

The two-person show is sharply acted by Brian D'Arcy James and Tom McGowan, aided and abetted in comically peeling off their characters' layers of protection and pain by director Leonard Foglia. All three are Broadway veterans, as are the rest of the production's creative crew, a hallmark of Bay Street Theatre shows.

The set-up: Bill (D'Arcy James) has just moved in to a suburban condo complex when his neighbor Jack (McGowan) stops in to introduce himself and check out the newcomer. Jack comes across at first as a loud, intrusive, lonely, obnoxious man. He later adds "liar" to his personality description but will reveal two hurtful secrets that eventually make him a character one can sympathize with. Bill is more physically attractive, and more reserved; also, honest and forthright, he has his own issues.

Jack is divorced and has children. When Bill calls him a divorcee, Jack responds, "A divorcee is a woman. Men get to wipe the slate clean." He at first tells Bill he views marriage as protection from being alone. Bill, who is married, sees "marriage as a base from which you go off and do things."

So, in the opening scene, we seem to have an "Odd Couple" sitcom, but the final scene of this one-acter gets a little deeper. We glimpse the painful realities beneath the wit. As Jack remarks, "What we think will happen [in our lives] is [the view of] youth. What really happens is middle age"—thus the title of the comedy, Things Being What They Are.

Playwright Wendy MacLeod is a much-produced dramatist who is the playwright-in-residence at her alma mater, Kenyon College. This comedy came about when she decided to write a play based on an assignment she gave her students: write a play with characters of the opposite gender. She tried it herself and accurately captures the feelings and interplay between her two male protagonists.

Brian D'Arcy James is a musical comedy star (most recently in The Apple Tree, Dirty Rotten Scoundrels and Sweet Smell of Success) as well as an actor (The Lieutenant of Inishmore and The Good Thief). He is quite touching and appealing as Bill. Tom McGowan, as Jack, is also a Broadway veteran (Chicago, Ivanov, La Bete) who audiences may recognize from his recurring television roles on Frasier and Everybody Loves Raymond. He is very affecting as he works his way into Jack's core.

Leonard Foglia directs these two fine actors with pace, sensitivity and understanding. Brian Nason's lighting, Tony Melfa's sound design, and Rebecca Lustig's costumes bring the two characters crisply and sharply into focus. Michael McGarty's set is clean, spare and genetic, as the script requires, adding a touch of color with the backdrop.

Things Being What They Are debuted at the Seattle Repertory Theater and then headed east to Chicago where it was a hit at Steppenwolf Theater. This Bay Street production marks its East Coast premiere. Performances began on May 22 and only continue through this Sunday, June 3. Tickets are available at the box office (631-725-9500) or online at www.baystreet.org.

review: 110 in the shade...by gordin & christiano

Audra McDonald absolutely sizzles in the Lonny Price revival of 110 in the Shade for the Roundabout Theatre Company. Her heartfelt radiant performance is at the center of the old fashioned tale that echoes a universal message about having the confidence to believe in yourself.

110 in the Shade is based on The Rainmaker, a play by N. Richard Nash that appeared on television before coming to Broadway in 1954 and was subsequently turned into a film by Paramount two years later starring Katharine Hepburn and Burt Lancaster, but the musical hasn't been seen along the rialto since premiering on Broadway 44 years ago. Now there is a terrific reason for the current reincarnation and the radiant Audra McDonald is that reason. Her magnificent voice is in supple shape and with her thrilling "star turn," she brings urgency and emotional depth to Lizzie that is a joy to witness.

The musical, set in a 1930 drought-stricken Texas town during the middle of a heat wave, always had a cult following and is essentially about relationships. Lizzie Curry (Audra McDonald), on the verge of becoming a lonely old maid, lives on a small ranch with her father (John Cullum); an older brother, Noah (Chris Butler) and a younger brother, Jimmy (Bobby Steggert). The men are attempting to get her hitched up with a repressed widower, the town sheriff, File (Christopher Innvar), when a charismatic drifter named Starbuck (Steve Kazee) floats into town selling dreams and promising to bring rain for $100. He enters their lives and ignites Lizzie's passion one evening under the moonlight.

Keeping the show small and intimate, stage director Lonny Price, who has worked with Ms. McDonald previously, has only made minor changes. In particular, he has played down the aspect of Lizzie being a homely woman, instead, focusing on her outspoken spirited nature as the reason she can't attract a man. The story is her emotional journey and Price has let her feelings triggered by her relationships guide the evening, but the musical numbers are the highlights – the real moments.

Audra MacDonald

The romantic show is held together by beautifully crafted, charming songs that move the story along while giving it substance and nuance. The best of the evening belongs to Ms. McDonald and she makes the most of every one of them. She has the time of her life with "Raunchy," naughtily imagining herself as a vamp. She sings beautifully with her elegant soprano in "Simple Little Things" and flirts with the sheriff, File, in "A Man and a Woman." She explodes with raw fear at the end of Act I in an intensely dramatic "Old Maid," but in "Is It Really Me?" she shines with glowing bliss at discovering her own inner beauty.

Make no mistakes, this is Lizzie's journe, and the four-time Tony Award-winning actress shines in the role. The gifted actress/soprano never stops working and, at 36, is a legend in the making. Just last week she took home the Drama Desk Award for Outstanding Leading Actress in a musical for her work in 110 in the Shade and she has also been nominated for yet another Tony Award.

110 In the Shade opened May 9 on Broadway at Studio 54, 254 West 54th Street. Tickets are available by calling Roundabout Ticket Services at (212) 719-1300, online at www.roundaboutheatre.org or in person at the theater box office.

The 2007 East End Arts Council Teeny Awards

Talent knows no age, and for the past five years, the Teeny Awards have been a testament to this notion. The Teeny Awards offer East End students who excel in theatre recognition and support, just as similar programs have done for young athletes for decades. High schools can choose to participate and then anonymous judges attend performances throughout the spring. The Teeny Awards are sponsored by the East End Arts Council and the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center. The judges evaluate students based on several criteria.

In plays, students are evaluated based on skill demonstrated in Movement, Delivery and Stage Presence. The Movement category is further broken down into physical expression, gesture, posture and fluidity. The Delivery category is divided into projection, articulation, interaction, timing and expression. Stage Presence is judged by the student's confidence, believability, enthusiasm and charisma.

In musicals, Singing and Dancing, in both solo and group settings, are taken into consideration. Singing encompasses intonation, range, interpretation, phrasing, rhythm, articulation and ensemble work. Dancing is judged by technique, expression, gesture and ensemble work. All schools were provided with a rubric explaining evaluation procedures early in the school year.

But this Sunday is the big day. On June 3, Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center will host a formal awards ceremony that has been likened to a "mini-Oscars." In the past, teenage talents have come on stage in tuxedoes and sneakers, given gracious acceptance speeches and then paused to snap digital photos of themselves at the podium. It's an exciting ceremony for all those in attendance.

MINI – MOVIE REVIEWS

Mr. Brooks

A detective follows a potential serial killer, a normal man with a dangerous alter ego. Kevin Costner and Demi Moore follow a possible blockbuster, another movie that will probably flop. I am tired of these "psychological" crime dramas starring established actors and attractive 40-something-year-old women. What kind of genre is that? A forgettable one.

Knocked Up

The 40-Year-Old Virgin director and team are back with what is poised to be this summer's comedy hit. But that team is not nearly as awesome as the starring couple, who can be credited as the hot alien from (cancelled) WB teen sci-fi series Roswell (okay, and now the hot girl from Grey's Anatomy) and the stoner from (cancelled) NBC teen comedy series Freaks & Geeks. Color them a comeback.

Day Watch

A Moscow-based hero fights evil and seeks a mysterious object that can rewrite history in this action-packed film that broke box office records in Russia. If he wins, could they rewrite this movie? Or maybe they'd prefer to rewrite the Cold War? Kidding! This beautiful and fascinating film is bound to be a cult hit.

Rise: Blood Hunter

If you have to subtitle your movie in order to explain it, then there's a problem. If you subtitle it something flashy like "Blood Hunter," you know it just ain't good enough to make money without marketing. Even fan favorite and Kill Bill villain Lucy Liu can't make this movie rise.

Gracie

Set in the late '70s, Gracie follows a New Jersey girl who fights to play on the boys' varsity soccer team. Her name sounds strangely biblical. She's from New Jersey. Make her go away. It's like a white-bred Bend it Like Beckham, but bad.

Crazy Love

A documentary on Burt and Linda Pugach's improbable relationship, Crazy Love is a love story that follows the extramarital affairs and subsequent throwing of acid in the eyes. Many moons of jail-time later, the subject couple is now happily married. Love is blind.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywod In The Hamptons

Waitress & Georgia Rule

Call me the ol'Heartbreaker. I know you will be decimated by my not continuing coverage of the Summer Blockbusters, however, Pirates of the Caribbean and Shrek don't need my help or detraction. Shrek already has the next sequel in the works. Maybe if the Grumpy Green Giant makes bigger strides, I'll report on that one. And I did review Spider Man 3. I saw my duty and I dunnit. For now I would like to address more mature subjects. How about on the feminine side? Waitress and Georgia Rule, for example. Interestingly, Waitress was made by a woman and Georgia Rule by men and, like an old time errant petticoat, it shows.

Waitress is a lip smacking, warm delicacy with as much heart as Valentine's Day. It's that wowing, offbeat humor that can cast away the pall of bleak sadness of the auteur's tragic death last fall. The film's writer and director Adrienne Shelly, who also co-stars, was killed by a renovation worker when she complained about the noise. He set it up to look like a suicide, hanging her from a shower rod. A terrible tragedy – bittersweet when experiencing the films poignant pluck. I generally consider "pluck" an awful description of a female characteristic but Shelley's total lack of coyness bars irritating stereotypes and caricatures and therefore, not insulting. Its central vivacious waitress is Keri Russell as Jenna, a Southern belle (in the best sense) who also is a highly creative pie baker, with equally creative titles, which depend on their inspiration. This takes place in a broken down diner run by its owner Joe, a crotchety sage-like, fatherly confidant played by Andy Griffith, who hijacks every scene he shares. Holding their own though, are Ms. Shelly and Cheryl Hines as Russell's waitress pals with tart as rhubarb-tongues and sweet-as-the-berries kindness.

Ms. Russell's Jenna boldly concocts imaginative pies with passion, perhaps it's because her husband continually demoralizes her with demands for attention. A clue as to her feelings for husband Earl, downplayed by Jeremy Sisto, is made clear when she names a creation, "I Hate My Husband Pie." Her passion has to be channeled somewhere. She finds that she is pregnant – oddly, this strained situation will take on Fairy Tale overtones. She daringly sparks an affair with her OB-GYN, Dr. Pomatter, a charming Nathan Fillion. Though he is married, she goes for it! You know what I'm talking about. As a matter of fact, later, she glows her way through Joe's pie diner hunting out sex to the music "Short Skirt/Long Jacket." Waitress is as brazen as chocolate and as misty-eyed and self revelatory as blackberry-plum, hot between yellow butter-laden crusts. Keri Russell's performance soars but it is Adrienne Shelly's soul that gives it wings. Its exhilaration of Jenna's pregnancy defines her nature. Adrienne Shelly was pregnant when she wrote Waitress.

And then there is Georgia Rule, a film by Garry Marshall. You know him. He's made a great deal of entertaining stuff from way back to the "Laverne and Shirley" TV days to 1990s hit Pretty Woman. It dared to make a prostitute an object of romantic worship. Almost as holy as if "in the bible writ." With screenwriter Mark Andrus, they have managed to put their women through a dirty laundry list of out of the norm behavioral activities that were likely to have been culled from Lifetime Cable TV. A mother-daughter-granddaughter story becomes a litany of what's wrong with the human condition or the price of tomatoes or, want to know what's ugly?

Grandma is Georgia. She's tough (feisty fits) and as done by Jane Fonda, she is all that and remarkable as an actress. She is fit and feisty, as sharp as a stiletto. As Georgia is a wounded widow, a hypocrite, a card shark and ruler of her own domain. As the title says. Georgia rules. Her daughter Lilly is a frustrated Felicity Huffman. She has good reason to be. Her daughter Rachel, playing her real life persona, Lindsay Lohan, is a teenager going on total "mess." Mother's drinking a lot and can't handle what her daughter's been doing – being an out of control, foul mouthed crazy. What else to do but introduce her to tough old bird Georgia. Georgia gives Rachel her credo, "There's the right way and then there is Georgia Rule"! How will she handle her? Rachel has been sexually abused by her stepfather!! Oh well, just another little problem to be fixed up before the closing Hollywood credits.

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of awardwinning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at Major Film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmy's and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

It's feel-good time just to see the many colors of spring visible at farmers markets and farm stands that have opened here on the East End. With longer, sunny days warming us we are in prime time to enjoy the local bounty fresh from the growers.

I recently joined the Green Thumb Organic Market's Community Supported Agriculture (CSA). CSA exists in many places in the country and is a way of supporting local farms in their endeavor to bring to the public the freshest and finest produce through the seasons. Early June pickings at the Green Thumb in Water Mill will yield the sweetest lettuces, tender asparagus, "summer peas" and the first strawberries of the season, red, lush and juicy.

Mesclun are greens that are grown together to include an assortment of lettuces and are best purchased from local or organic farms. Lettuces in a mix from three thousand miles away could possibly include a strain of greens detrimental to our health. A simple mesclun salad of crisp greens dressed with light vinaigrette can become a daily habit. Embellish the salad if you will with nuggets of creamy goat cheese or a rich gorgonzola. A composed salad of purple-headed asparagus becomes something uncommon when dressed with caper vinaigrette and garnished with julienne of roasted sweet pepper. And the green shell pea is just one of a variety of edible peas that is literally here today and gone tomorrow. The vegetable needs warmth but not heat and so its tiny time frame is late spring to early summer. Combine them with different varieties – thereby less shelling to do – and create an assemblage with sugar snaps and snow peas.

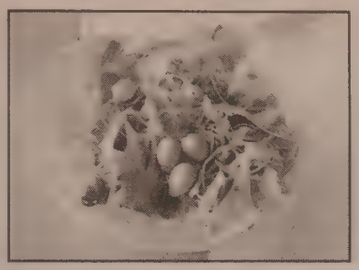

With infectious diseases and environmental health issues on the rise it has never been more important to eat locally. Supporting our local farmers and preparing foods from the good earth surrounding us is not only good for our health but it keeps money in the local economy. Happy seasonal eating!

MESCLUN SALAD WITH BASIC VINAIGRETTE

Mesclun, salad greens of Provencal origin, is derived from the term Mecla meaning to mix. Today the mix is grown together to include an assortment of greens to accommodate a variety of color, texture and flavor. Mesclun is generally dressed with a light dressing of oil, vinegar, salt and pepper to as not to obscure its delicate flavors.

Serves 2-4

1/4-1/2 pound mesclun greens, washed and spin-dried
2-3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
Coarse (kosher) salt
3/4-1 tablespoon imported red wine or balsamic vinegar
Freshly ground pepper

1. Spread greens on a double length of paper towels. Roll up and wrap greens to absorb excess moisture. If preparing ahead place in a Zip-loc bag and chill until ready to serve.

2. When ready to serve transfer greens to a salad bowl to dress. To describe how to simply dress a salad tilt the olive oil over the greens and in a gentle rotary motion pour the oil in a slow steady stream beginning at the outer perimeter towards the center. Toss the greens with the oil which can stand for up to ten minutes without getting soggy. Measure the salt into the bowl of a tablespoon measure and add vinegar to the salt. Swish the vinegar to dissolve the salt and quickly repeat the same circular movement over the greens; add several grinds of peppercorns and toss well to mix. Serve at once.

AN ASSEMBLAGE OF PEAS

Serves 2-4

1 pound peas of different varieties
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
Unsalted butter to taste
Chopped herbs, basil, mint and/or chives

1. String snow peas and sugar snap peas if using; shuck shelling peas. Bring a pot of water to the boil and add salt: drop in the peas. Boil until they're bright green and tender about a minute or two. Drain, shake dry and return to the pan they cooked in where they'll finish drying in their own heat. Stir in 1 or 2 tablespoons butter, a little pepper, and whatever fresh herbs appeal to you.

ASPARAGUS IN CAPER VINAIGRETTE

To insure tenderness, choose asparagus that are firm with compact closed tips and stalks that are green almost their entire length.

Serves 8

2 pounds fresh asparagus
Coarse (kosher) salt

CAPER VINAIGRETTE

2-3 teaspoons Dijon mustard
1/2 teaspoon coarse (kosher) salt
Freshly ground pepper
2 tablespoons sherry or tarragon vinegar
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1/4 cup capers, drained
1/3 cup extra-virgin olive oil

GARNISH

Roasted red peppers or pimentos cut into 1/2-inch strips, optional and additional capers for garnish, optional.

1. Snap off the woody ends of asparagus where they naturally bend. With the tip of a paring knife, trim away the triangular scales along the spear, leaving the tender scales at the head. Rinse clean.

2. Place asparagus spears in a large skillet. Pour over fresh cold water to barely cover and bring to the edge of a boil. Add salt. Adjust heat to a brisk simmer and cook uncovered for 4-8 minutes depending on thickness of asparagus. Do not overcook. Test for doneness with the tip of a knife or press with fingertips. Drain asparagus and cool quickly under a spray of cold water. Spread on a clean kitchen towel and pat dry to absorb excess moisture.

3. Caper Vinaigrette: combine mustard, salt, pepper, vinegar, lemon juice, and capers and stir to mix. Gradually add oil until mixture is thoroughly blended. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary.

4. To Serve: Arrange asparagus on a serving dish so cut ends meet in the center of dish with tips facing out. Place red pepper garnish over cut ends and top with additional capers. Spoon dressing over spears, leaving the tips exposed.

Dining in the Hamptons

Dockside Bar & Grill

26 Bay Street
Sag Harbor
631-725-0677

If you are looking for that perfect, relaxed, Hamptons-quality lunch or dinner, go no further than the Dockside Bar and Grill, located in Sag Harbor's American Legion building on Bay Street. Perhaps you are walking from the Long Wharf or some of the village shops and are eager to enjoy an intimate conversation and light fare with some family or close friends – you will find just the spot as you approach Dockside Bar and Grill, taking note of the colorful array of umbrellas, where diners can sit outside and enjoy some of the most unparalleled water views on the East End.

I had the opportunity to dine at the Dockside Bar and Grill and was delighted to stumble upon an establishment with such a widely varied menu that touches upon not only American but also Asian, Mexican and Thai cuisines. Yet as my colleague, Sabrina Mashburn and I and two of our friends sat down to sample some of the food, we knew that no matter what the menu had to offer, the emphasis on fresh, local fish was what really impressed us.

Stacy Sheehan and Elizabeth Barnes own and manage Dockside Bar and Grill – they were so inviting and courteous that we forgot we were out to lunch during the busy Memorial Day weekend and felt more like we were at our friends' house, dining on their backyard patio. Stacey explained to us that all their produce is organic and that they use grass-fed cattle and even plan to start up an affiliation with Quail Hill Farm, one of the original CSA (Community Supported Agriculture) farms in the U.S., located in Amagansett, on land donated to the Peconic Land Trust by Deborah Ann Light.

The entire restaurant has white and blue décor and their fully-stocked bar area and fine furniture really add to the entire appeal of the Dockside experience.

To start off, we ordered some lobster and avocado spring rolls with sesame ginger dipping sauce, which were soft and a pleasure to eat. Of course, you can't come to Sag Harbor and not have shellfish – we ordered a serving of steamer clams with a buttery dipping sauce. The steamers were sweet, clean and full-bodied. We also ordered the natural pork and ginger dumplings with a cranberry teriyaki glaze that were crisp and delicate, yet the real winner of the appetizer round was certainly the frizzled shrimp with corn and jicama salsa and chipotle aioli. The shrimp were cooked perfectly and wrapped with fried glass noodles and the jicama was crisp and mildly spicy. The entire dish was executed with precision and the presentation, with the shrimp fanned out across the plate, only added to the success of the meal.

For our entrées, we were a little overwhelmed by the amount of choices but Stacey steered us in the right direction and recommended a few dishes that are absolute Dockside staples.

The fresh herb and crumb-crusted cod with lemon beurre blanc, which was served with sautéed spinach and mashed potatoes, was cooked so well that the lemon wedge on the side of the plate seemed unecessary. The lemony flavor and juicy codfish complimented the blanched asparagus marvelously.

We also sampled the sesame tuna wrap with roasted tomatoes, shredded lettuce, avocado and ginger wasabi mayo, wrapped in a flour tortilla. This dish embodied the ideal luncheon treat, being both tasty and reasonably priced.

Also passed around the table was a melody of crab plates that included the pan-fried crab cakes with spicy remoulade and baby basmati rice and the special of the day, which was the soft-shelled crab sandwich served on sourdough with lettuce, tomatoes and tartar sauce. Like the other seafood dishes, the crab was fresh with a hint of mild heat.

The winner of the entrée round was without a doubt the Dockside "must eat" dish – the lobster salad. The lobster meat was generous, firm and far from soggy. The celery chunks made the salad mix crunchy and this was tossed over chef selected mesclun greens in lemon basil vinaigrette.

At this point, we were absolutely stuffed with some of the finest seafood from the local waters. Although we didn't have room to try any during this meal, the chicken is free-range and the wings are one of their most famous dishes. The restaurant seats about 70 people. The price range is moderate to expensive but you really can't complain when, after all, your sitting "dockside" in the Hamptons. Enjoy.

Arts & Galleries

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

"STITCHED" AT SURFACE LIBRARY

Now's the time for new galleries to appear in the Hamptons. If truth be told, the determination to write about a just-opened venue depends on whether the critic knows the owners and / or the artists' works. In the case of the Surface Gallery to Springs Fireplace Road, it's the latter consideration that counted most, particulaly the embroidery of Christa Maiwald.

Ms. Maiwald enjoys a fine reputation as a filmmaker, photographerand creator of unique embroidery. Her exhibits can be seen mostly in New York at the Florence Lynch Gallery and in Europe. The point is, Ms. Maiwald has a speciality allowing her to exhibit other places besides the Hamptons. If some people want to call what she does a craft, so be it. No matter. We all know that crafts can be art. More salient, however, is that Ms. Maiwald goes beyond the definitions and functions attributed to craft. Her pieces often approach conceptual art in this critic's view. Often, too, their themes and technique (embroidery) are connected.

Ms. Maiwald creates potent series; in the past her works focused on the teenage psyche. It's curious that the present series at the Surface Gallery seemingly has nothing to do with human behavior at all. But on second thought, we can see a connection in her pieces featuring psychological disorders. Some images are easy to relate to the disorder – some need a pretty solid knowledge in a particular malady to interpret. For example, "Plant Therapy" (Narcissist) pictures a blossom held up to a mirror. "Plant Therapy" (Failure to Thrive) conveys two hands that are destroying a plant with garden tools. (It's curious that the "failure" is due to human behavior, not nature's intervention, like a drought.)

Christa Maiwald, Agoraphobic

Then there are the pieces that are difficult to understand. One is "Asperger's Disorder," a high-functioning kind of Autisim. If disconnection is the point, the imagery is relevant. Conversely, in "Agoraphobic," the idea of a thriving plant being attacked by stones is lost on this critic (who happens to suffer from agoraphobia).

There are other arresting works in the exhibit that employ fascinating materials, textures and ideas. Consider Irys Schenker's screens, which evoke both a sense of function and grace, especially "Blue Stairs." Kelly Frigard's felted wood also conveys a "blue" theme, with a particularly intriguing "Blue Ocean."

Petula Bloomfield's stunning handmade paper pieces, including one work using an acrylic wash, is another unique celebration of texture, material and design.

Let's hope that other exhibitions like this one will be forthcoming, expanding the possibilities of the nature of art in the Hamptons.

"Stitched" will be on view until June 3. Call the Surface Library at 631- 291-9061.

Honoring the Artist: Joe Fig

While Jackson Pollock has always been a popular subject for various projects originating in the Hamptons, the current cover by Joe Fig proves that such endeavors are still generating interest. The following conversation with Mr. Fig goes into more detail.

Q: Your cover showing Pollock's studio is part of an extensive series of sculptures celebrating various artists' studios. The minatures will also be part of a forthcoming exhibit at the Parrish Museum called "Studio as Muse." Tell us about the evolution of the series. First, your interest in artists' studios.

A: When I was in graduate school at the School of Visual Arts, there was a whole floor filled with student studios. It got me thinking about how to set up a studio. Then I got interested in contemporary artists and their work spaces – I did a sculpture of a friend's studio first. Then it evolved into people like de Kooning and Pollock. I always liked abstract expressionists. I looked through photographs of their studios, and I went to the Pollock-Krasner House, for example.

Q: How did you proceed with the living artists?

A: I decided to interview them besides doing minatures of their studios. Artists like April Gornik, Eric Fischl, Chuck Close and Ross Bleckner. The interviews took place over a five-year period.

Q: What would you say you learned the most about artists or their process during these interviews or during the course of the project generally?

A: I started to question what success is, that the most successful artists are those who work the hardest. Some of them even said that artists are the hardest working people they know. Also, they don't seem to wait around to be inspired. They knew they have to get in the studio and work everyday. I asked them about their typical day, and most of it is basically tedious. Their day is like any other person's day.

Q: In other words, not particularly romantic or filled with drama and pretty models. Or like movies we've seen about artists' lives including Rodin and his mistress/model, Camille.

A: Right.

Q: Another aspect about your project's evolution concerns your chosen medium. How did your interest in sculpture begin?

A: I was painting for ten years using a representational style,working in large scale, painting people and places inspired by American Regionalist art. But that came to an end. I went back to graduate schoool, which was a better experience than undergraduate school since I was not pressured to sell my work, and I didn't have to worry about my tuition. In undergraduate school, I went back and forth between painting and sculpture so it was easier to make the transition to sculpture.

Q: How about your interest in art? How did that come about?

A: I grew up in Seaford, Long Island; I didn't know much about art. I did drawings for years with my identical twin brother and then painted without knowing what it means. When I was younger, I said I wanted to make a living as an artist by the time I was between 35 and 40-years-old. I'm 39. I'm in this for the long run.

Q: In ten years, what do you think you'll be doing?

A: I have no idea. I work piece to piece to make each work so I don't necessarily look ahead. I like this method, as long as I don't repeat myself.

The cover is titled, "Jackson Pollock: 1951 (detail), 2002" by Joe Fig (American, b. 1968). Mixed media. 24 x 42 x 30 inches. Collection of Steven G. Perelman, New York. Mr. Fig's website is: www.joefig.com.

"Studio As Muse" at the Parrish Art Museum

An artist's studio is a place of creation and, at times, frustration. Although the studio is used as a space for production, it can become a second home and one must feel a sense of comfort. The interior and exterior of the structure, art materials, personal collections and objects should form a source of inspiration – at least this is how I feel about my new studio!

The Parrish Art Museum of Southampton seeks to explore the studio space and the important role it plays in the lives of artists. "Studio As Muse" highlights this concept by intertwining three powerful exhibitions – "Herzog & de Meuron's Design for the New Parrish," "Fairfield Porter: Inside and Outside the Artist's Studio," "The Studio in Miniature: Joe Fig."

It was founded by Samuel Longstreth, a prominent member of a Philadelphia Quaker family who sought to create a community exhibition hall as construction of the wooden structure commenced in the summer of 1897. Due to Parrish's extensive travels and collection of Italian Renaissance art and Classical Greek and Roman sculptural replicas, the space housed his collection and introduced the East End community to such works of culture. In the following years additions occurred including a concert hall, a wing of galleries and an arboretum. The museum design and construction spanned over twenty years and was headed by Southampton resident and architect, Grosvenor Atterbury.

Let's fast forward to 2007. The "Herzog & de Meuron's Design for the New Parrish" component of the "Studio As Muse" exhibition displays new design plans of these Switzerland based architects and Pritzker Architecture Prize recipients, as new galleries and additions to the museum will come to fruition by 2009. The works of Herzog and de Meuron have international recognition and The Parrish Art Museum chose their vision because it holds sensitivity to the East End geographic surroundings and culture for which the structure is designed, specifically inspired by the pristine East End artistic heritage and lighting. Jacques Herzog, as quoted on the Parrish Museum website, states, "We are delighted to have been selected to work on the new building for The Parrish Art Museum. It will be an exciting challenge to develop the project for its new site. We look forward to working closely with the Parrish team to create new spaces for their collection and new facilities for innovative programs of the future."

To enhance the Herzog and de Meuron's installation, the exhibition provides two additional lenses in response to the artist's studio. "Fairfield Porter: Inside and Outside the Artist's Studio" exhibition charts the life and works of the famed East End artist. Porter (1907-1975) thrived in his Southampton studio – an old stable behind the Southampton home where he and his family lived for over 25 years. Serving as a source of inspiration, Porter's experiential works depicted the beautiful surroundings as seen through his studio. His body of work also explored another perspective of his studio as he painted the exterior in observance through his house. Works on view are compiled of the Parrish Art Museum's permanent collection along with works on loan from private collectors. It's apparent that Porter's spirit lives on in his beloved Southampton.

The third exhibition, "The Studio in Miniature: Joe Fig," examines the artist's studio from an outsider's perspective. Fig, a Long Island based artist, recreates the artist's studio on a smaller scale through sculptural replicas and installations. Educated at the School of Visual of Arts in New York City, Fig received both his BFA and MFA degrees and has a laundry list of exhibitions under his belt, specifically drawing inspiration from living and deceased East End artists such as Jackson Pollack, Chuck Close and the shared studios of April Gornik and Eric Fischl. Fig meticulously reconstructs the studios in grave detail, giving the viewers the experience of looking inside the artist's creative space. Investigating both the interior studio happenings and exterior structures, Fig truly combines fine art and architecture through various media such as sculptures, paintings and photography.

The exhibition runs from June 3 to August 5 at The Parrish Art Museum, located at 25 Jobs Lane in Southampton. The summer hours (from June 1 to September 15) are Monday through Saturday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m. Adults pay $7, seniors and students pay $5 and children under 18 have free admittance. Events and special programs may have an additional fee. For more information, call 631-283-2118.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Rhododendron Magic

During the next few days rhododendron will be blooming across the East End. This elegant shrub, with its beautiful blooms, graces the homes of the rich and poor alike. Clearly this is the best flowering evergreen for the landscape, providing wonderful late spring blooms and magnificent evergreen leaves. It is not too late to purchase rhododendrons this year. It is an excellent plant for East End gardens because the shrub is acid loving, has shallow roots, requires little maintenance and is even deer proof.

Rhododendrons exist in the wild, mostly in mountainous areas of the arctic and northern temperate zones. Plant collectors have gathered species for more than a century from all over the world. This has led to the cultivation of a variety of colorful species with large flowers. Today, most of the shrubs that are sold are hybrids, propagated from cuttings or tissue cultures. The shrubs have large, shiny, leathery evergreen leaves and clusters of large flowers in shades of pink, white, rose, purple or some variation. The newest hybrids include colors such as peach, yellow and even orange. Flowers appear mostly in the spring, but some species may bloom as late as mid-July.

The shrubs grow best in filtered or partial sunlight. Soil around the shallow roots of the shrub must be kept cool and moist, but well drained. This shrub is not suitable for beachfront properties where the shrub receives full sunlight and heated soil or sand. Full sunlight bleaches out the flowers, burns the leaves and dehydrates this shrub.

Mass plantings of rhododendrons seem to work best. Single plants can be used as specimens but make a weaker statement. When planting groups, the shrubs make a bold statement at the fronts of properties, along garden paths and to punctuate landscape design. They are an ideal textural element for the landscape. Planting rhododendrons where they receive some protection from wind helps avoid leaf scorch and splitting of the stems. Ideally, select a site that slopes north or east and receives some protection from drying south and west winds.

When planting a rhododendron, prepare the soil by enriching it with mulch or peat moss. Garden loam mixed with equal parts of coarse sand and grinded bark or oak leaves also works well. Dig a hole that is eighteen inches deep and wide to start. If a bucket of water poured into the hole has not been absorbed within 30-minutes, dig deeper and add some broken crockery, sand or rocks at the bottom to improve the drainage. Remove any burlap wrapping from the roots. Contrary to the opinion of some garden centers, burlap impedes root growth and is often treated with chemicals that harm the environment. During removal of the burlap, be careful not to disturb the fragile roots.

Place loose soil at the bottom of the hole and position the plant so the soil line of the plant is level with the surrounding soil. Back fill the hole with the amended soil and water heavily. Keep the plant well watered for the first growing season. Do not over water thereafter, as this can create root rot.

Be careful about fertilizing. It can potentially damage fragile roots. Supplemental feeding is not normally needed if you use a year-round mulch of rotted oak leaves that provide natural nutrients and help keep the soil cool and moist. If leaves begin to yellow, apply a fertilizer for acid-loving plants around the shrub's base in early spring.

Many of the reputable nurseries on the East End carry rhododendrons during spring. Marders, East Hampton Gardens and Wittendales all sell wonderful examples. Do not select plants with yellowed leaves, or if they seem withered. Avoid plants with dried out root balls.

As the shrub grows, prune it after the flowers have faded. This will promote new growth and helps to maintain shape. Light-to-moderate pruning done immediately after flowering will not affect flower bud formation for the following year. After flowering, deadhead spent flowers to make the bush look more attractive and to prevent a heavy set of seeds. Deadheading increases the number of flowers the following season.

Rhododendrons are typically priced to be within reach of every gardener. We believe every garden ought to have at least one example of this plant.

Seashells by the Seashore

She sells seashells by the seashore. Say that phrase five times fast. Not so easy, is it? Luckily, decorating with seashells is a much easier task.

Seashells are the quintessential beach house-decorating tool. Inexpensive, pretty and versatile, shells give a home that casual, relaxed feel that everyone is looking for in the summertime.

If you are planning to decorate with seashells, you can either go the route of purchasing them or you can stay authentic and hunt for the shells yourself on the shores of the great East End beaches. Should you choose the latter option, it is essential that you thoroughly clean the shells or the aesthetic beauty could be lost due to the horrible smell emanating from your newest beach find.

To clean a shell with no animal tissue inside, simply place the shell in a 50/50 mixture of bleach and water. Let the shells soak until the flaky covering, called the periostracum, comes off. The amount of time for soaking will vary depending on the quality of the shells. Once the shell is removed, a coat of baby oil should be added to give the shell an extra luminous shine.

Now that the shells are clean, the fun can begin. There are so many simple ways to decorate with shells. They can either stand alone in a decorating scheme, which is particularly true for bigger or more rare finds such as giant conch shells, or they can be employed in a "more is more" philosophy. Shells look great when they are piled up together in jars or vases. Filling a jar with a collection of shells and sea glass is an excellent way to show off your beachcombing skills and it looks quite nice sitting on a shelf in any room.

At a family reunion this weekend, at a house just a three-minute walk from the beach, many seashells were on display. Outside in the garden, a serving tray was filled with shells of all shapes and sizes and placed just off the path. The shells in the garden connected the house to the beach in a subtle, yet pretty way.

But it was nightfall when my cousin's seashell decorating was in full view. She had placed candles in the center of several lanterns and vases and surrounded them with shells, which had a gorgeous effect. Her candles were blue, the most fitting color for such an idea. Her lanterns were several different sizes and so the bigger shells fit perfectly in the bigger lanterns, while the smaller shells were more effectively displayed in the smaller vases. Even if you don't have a large collection of shells yet, you can still adopt the idea by starting with a small amount of sand in the vase and then gradually adding shells after visits to the beach.

If you are looking to add more light to your outdoor entertaining, using shells is the perfect way to transform an ordinary strand of lights into a tailored summer lighting scheme. With the strand on the ground, attach a shell to the base of each light bulb. Apply epoxy to the hinge of the shell and press firmly. Let the shells dry and then hang.

Another great thing to do with seashells, perfect for people looking for a craft, is to take a fairly large scallop shell, about the size of a hand, and turn it into a candle. Buy a candle-making kit at the craft store, follow the instructions and then use the shell as the mold. The result will be a dual-purpose decoration, serving as an eye-catching table ornament and a practical source of light.

You can also turn shells into a vacation memento. After visiting a different beach or at the end of the summer, choose some shells with a flat surface and decorate them with paint. Write the names of the beaches, the date or draw a picture. Then place the shells around the house, or perhaps on the steps of a deck or around a patio. The shells will serve as a great reminder of all the fun you had on the beaches, and labeling your shells will help you remember which shells are from which beach.

And for all those shells with holes that aren't quite perfect for display or painting, create a wind chime. Simply tie several shells on a fishing line and attach about five lines to a piece of wood. Hang in a place where the wind isn't too strong and you've got yourself a perfect little, beachy wind chime.

Grillin'

American culture is famous for taking simple items, spicing them up and making them costly and trendy. If you don't believe me, look no further than the evolution of grills.

Grills used to be merely a convenient way to cook meat outdoors. Turn the grill on, place the burgers and hot dogs on the fire and you were sitting down and eating in minutes. It couldn't be easier. Thanks to the popularity of the Food Network and cooking shows in general, those days are long gone.

"I love using gas grills because they are easier to heat and it's much easier to control the flames with a gas grill than with a charcoal fire," Bobby Flay, host of Food Network's "FoodNation" and "Boy Meets Grill" has said. "Grilling is not just about lighting a fire."

At over $5,000 for some of today's grills, grilling is much more than lighting a fire – it's a lifestyle. This approach to a backyard barbecue places a lot of pressure on the chef responsible for crafting delicious tasting chicken, steak, fish, ribs and seafood dishes – or whatever else one's stomach desires.

However, the best way to ensure a fine summer dining experience is by purchasing high quality food products and watching over the grub, making sure it doesn't stick to the grill or burn.

Popular culture has also transformed the meaning of the word "grill." Avid watchers of the reruns, "Flavor of Love" or "Pimp My Ride" are already well aware of this development.

In the show "Flavor of Love," Flavor Flav rocks his gold grills. Flavor Flav has been wearing gold caps ever since New Yorker Eddie Plein hooked him up with them in the 1980s.

At the start of the 21st century, the Dirty South rappers put the bling-bling, ranging from metals to diamonds, over their pearly whites. Top-of-the-line grills cost thousands of dollars and have been seen on the teeth of Ludacris, Lil Jon, Outkast and Goodie Mob. Some rappers wear grills to show off their economic success, front and center. In 2005, the video to Nelly's single "Grillz" features an array of some of today's most popular grill styles.

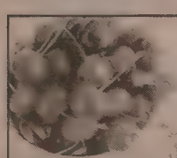

Since Flavor Flav will be appearing at the Whitehouse nightclub on June 2, it is a good idea to pick up some grills before the event to wear in his honor. For those of you who haven't struck it rich as a recording artist yet, you can still purchase grills for around $50. If that's still too much, there's always tin foil. After all, wearing a grill is a privilege. Students in certain school districts in Alabama, Georgia and Texas can't wear grills because they are banned.

Then there are the Grilles with an "e." During World War II, Grille was a series of self-propelled artillery vehicles used by Nazi Germany. Today, Grilles have a different meaning in the automotive sense as they are used to allow the car to breathe. Not to mention, they add style points to a person's ride. There are Mesh and Billet grilles or ones that come in an oval-diamond hole pattern, among others. Rappers and car enthusiasts know Grilles are an essential part of jazzing a car up.

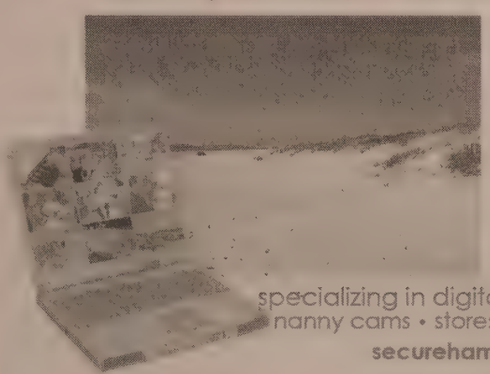

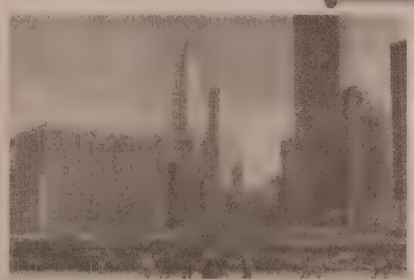

Lastly, there are the metal railings on balconies called grills. The spelling of this form of the word can go either way (grill or grille) depending on your personal preference.

If you don't have the cash for the life of a playa who is grillin', at the very least you can speak the lingo. You can take part in "grilling" someone by rapidly asking him or her numerous questions. Better yet, if someone gets in your personal space and yells in your face, you can respond by saying, "Why you gettin' all up in my grill?" This way you can continue promoting the versatile word, which can be used in conversations about food, jewelry, automobiles, music, buildings, or as slang in this instance.

Dan's HOME

Flowers Gone Wild

Many luxurious homes on the East End are situated on sprawling acres of land, offering the perfect landscape for a field of wildflowers, but this unique foliage can add beauty to smaller gardens and yards, too. The term wildflower used to mean that the seed was not intentionally planted, often found on roadsides, in grassy meadows, forests and along fences. But now planting wildflower seeds has become popular among gardeners because of the desirable benefits – they require little maintenance (and won't interfere with your busy summer schedule), attract butterflies and birds, provide a variety of color and return year after year. Also, wildflowers can easily grow in areas that are typically hard to mow and water such as sloping land and corners of buildings.

Wildflowers may be low-maintenance but creating this type of garden is far from scattering some seeds. Wildflower seeds can be planted during spring, summer or fall. Whichever season you choose, the location must receive six to eight hours of sun each day. Excellent drainage is also important, as wildflowers don't grow well in wet soil. Before planting, remove any weeds or grass in the area using a string trimmer or mower. Don't fertilize the soil unless it's very sandy – wildflowers can fare in less than average soils. Then, till approximately one to two inches of soil. To determine the amount of seed needed for your garden or field, measure the size and approximately plant at a rate of one pound for every 2,000 square feet. Use a lawn roller to press the seeds into the soil, or, if you don't have one, place a piece of plywood over the soil and stomp a few times to press the seeds into the soil. After the seeds are in the soil, lightly water the entire area and make sure it remains slightly moist for about five weeks. Once the seeds begin to bloom, natural rainfall can take over, as wildflowers survive a long time without water.

There are many types of wildflower seeds available. Garden centers carry prepackaged cans that contain a wide variety of wildflower seeds that will be listed on the label. You can also buy seeds in bulk that are usually sold by the pound. If you want to create your own mix, buy individual packages, but be sure to research which wildflowers grow best in your area. Different wildflowers attract different butterflies and insects. For instance, to attract butterflies plant Yarrows, Black-eyed Susans, Cosmos, Cleomes or Zinnias. If you want to attract hummingbirds plant Garden Columbines or Nasturtiums. If you want to attract beneficial insects such as minute pirate bugs, syrphid flies or ladybugs, plant Bishop's Weeds, Yarrows or Globe Candytufts.

If you want to cover a small area with wildflowers or if you are planting on a slope, use a wildflower mat. The seeds are woven into a biodegradable blanket that is covered with soil and water, and will prevent the seeds from washing away. In some areas, wildflowers are used to prevent erosion.

The best wildflower gardens contain both annual and perennials, giving the area a colorful variety of blooms of different sizes. At first, the garden or field might look like a bunch of weeds, but don't pull them out! You could possibly damage the wildflower seedlings, so be patient. Once the wildflower garden is fully grown, they will naturally get rid of most of the existing weeds. It is recommended to reseed the area every other spring so that a dominant species doesn't take over the garden. If one type of wildflower appears to be blooming more than others, don't worry because others are waiting to take its place when it fades. It might take years for the wildflower garden to flourish, but the results are worth the wait.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

This past week, three of the East End's most prominent brokerage firms helped to usher in summer by hosting a combined open house event. Sotheby's International Realty, the Corcoran Group and Brown Harris Stevens came together to celebrate the season and showcase six of their waterfronts on Dune Road. Sushi, wine, margaritas and Mexican fare were this week's themes in the fabulous waterfront homes ranging from $6.5 million to $18 million. All were open for public viewing and other area brokers. Throughout the summer season realtors invent style techniques such as this to appropriately feature their listings. Breathtaking ocean and bay views provided a beautiful backdrop for a stunning sunset affair.

There is no better way to sell an oceanfront property or to start off the season than to show prospective buyers what living on the water in the Hamptons is all about. Buyers can get a real feel for the Hamptons lifestyle and what it offers. Properties such as these are made for entertaining and are pouring with amenities such as pools, gyms, theatres, guest quarters and private beaches – and the expansive outdoor living spaces showing off the unbeatable views.

There is still time to buy and get on the beaches before the summer kicks into high gear. And this summer there are even more real estate offices on the East End to help you do so. East Hampton's Town & Country Real Estate has expanded onto the North Fork in both Mattituck and Southold. They have also spread out into Westhampton Beach and Bridgehampton. The agency also plans to open an office in Southampton in the near future. Town & Country holds the listing for the East Hampton Point Resort and Marina that went on the market in 2006 at $55 million. It is among some of the most valuable commercial properties on the East End market today. Reportedly there has been much interest in the property but no takers.

There is still some land left in the Hamptons if one is willing to pay the premiums that it takes to acquire it. An 11-acre piece of land in Southampton is listed with Corcoran for $17.5 million, and although it is not on or near the water, it is zoned in the village. Price demands seem to be creeping higher all the time. There are now so many multi-million dollar properties selling. It is no longer shocking to hear properties listed over $40 or even $50 million dollars and we can only imagine what some of the more elaborate estates that are not for sale, would fetch if they were on the market today.

The Bumble Bee Manor on Shelter Island is a state of the art, sixteen room and 16,000 square foot mansion on 3.2 waterfront acres, and is listed for $35 million. This estate has everything including a private dock built to accommodate a sizable yacht or seaplane. It has 300 feet of private beach, an infinity edged pool overlooking the water and a St. Barths-style pool house. There are seven custom designed fireplaces, a banquet sized dining room, professional kitchen, library, elevator, media room, a fitness room and a studio with a glass cupola. There are views from all points of the property. The property is listed exclusively with Peter Cook of Brown Harris Stevens at the Bridgehampton office.

On Gin Lane in Southampton, another luxurious estate is Longview, listed at $30 million. The property offers views of the ocean and Lake Agawam. This estate is gated for privacy and is set on 2.5 estate section acres. It has seven suite-style bedrooms, ten baths and multiple fireplaces throughout the homes living space. It also offers a state of the art pool and spa and a screening room. There is an elevator and staff's quarters. It is listed with Sotheby's International Realty in Southampton.

Mansions of this size and stature located throughout the more exclusive areas of the East End, particularly those in the estate sections, are easily priced upward of $25 million.

SAVE THE DAS
Dear Dan,

I was a recent visitor to the East End and was happily reading one of your recent newspapers when I came across your story concerning, among other things, the controversy around the firings of the District Attorneys. Maybe you were unaware of the true details, or maybe you were going easy on your conservative readership, but I'm afraid you did not accurately write the facts about why this issue is so relevant. Allow me to elaborate.

It is the legal right for every White House administration to fire and hire DA's, and they do that en mass every four to eight years when the occupant changes. However, DA firings mid-term have ONLY ever occurred when a particular DA is found to be corrupt or incompetent. It happens from rare time to time. That eight DAs, most of them Republican appointees, were fired together mid-term is unprecedented in our history, and corruption or incompetence has been shown not to be the reason for any.

Digging deeper by Henry Waxman et. al. has revealed a decided and completely inappropriate political slant. Those eight were fired for one of only two reasons: either to stop ongoing investigations against Republican politicians and/or their donors, or because those DA's were unwilling during the last election cycle to press unwarranted election fraud charges against Democratic candidates.

That's it, Dan. And this overt political bullying of DA's nationwide is a unique crime against the American citizenry (who depend on their DA's once in office to be impartial) that should be pursued and prosecuted by Congress up to its highest levels.

Thank you,
Gene Golus

Dear Dan,

Thanks for the great hospital article. It really boosted the morale of the nurses, employees and doctors. People must realize that the golden hour after any trauma, stroke or heart attack determines whether we live or die. Thank heavens for the dedicated staff of Southampton Hospital who are there for all of us 24/7. Many people complain "they need to make the hospital better." Guess what? We are they. So if you live here 25% of the time, give 25% of your charitable contributions to the hospital.

Thanks for all you do, Dan.

STONE COLD SOLDIER

I am lying in the field of stone
My skin and flesh
Have turned to bone

I never thought I'd be alone,
Lying here so fare from home,
I always did what I was told.
I never acted out nor did anything bold.
Before I knew it, I'd grown old.

Although it's too late,
I wouldn't hesitate to live my life anew.
I'd live each day as if it were the last,
Never looking back or regretting the past.

I'd give anything for one more day
So others could hear what I have to say:
"Life is so precious,
A gift to us all.
May we live life to its fullest
AND MAY GOD BLESS US ALL."

Dear Dan,
Dear David,

David, I read with much amusement your latest column about being half Jewish and half Catholic. I have a niece and nephew with the same heritage and I am sure they are often as confused. It seems that the three of you have a lot in common. My niece is 22 and going to City College and my nephew is 28 and living in Brooklyn. Their mother (my sister) was originally from Bellport, where I live, so they also have roots in many places.

Thank you again for your brilliant writing.

Police Blotter

Train Tracks

A woman was found sitting on the train tracks preventing trains from leaving the Hampton Bays station. Why nobody decided to run her over is being investigated. There have been reports that she finally decided to move after she was kicked repeatedly in the caboose.

Nazi

"Nazi" and "skinhead" were written in pencil on a door inside an East Hampton restroom. It was written directly below a comment that read, "Those that have little penis' please write underneath this," according to reports.

A man in East Hampton called police after his friend hit him the face with a ladle spoon at his house. According to police, both the friend and the complainer were completely drunk when the report was made. The man who was hit with the spoon did not press charges, he just wanted to scare the crap out of his friend for being a complete bonehead. His friend apologized and agreed that he would not hit his buddy in the face anymore with a spoon. You can't make this stuff up.

12 Bottles Of Wine And Liquor

12 bottles of wine and liquor were reported stolen from a Montauk residence. The location of the alcohol was the kitchen closet of the home. Police were a little skeptical of the report however, as the woman that made the report also reported an extreme hangover.

Motorola Razr Cell Phone

A Motorola Razr cellphone was stolen from a woman in East Hampton while the woman was exercising. The woman is not that upset however, because she now doesn't have to worry about getting her fingers cut.

Orange Painting

A sign that read 30 mph was painted over in orange according to police in Bridgehampton. Apparently, the person that made the report also made an "orange you glad I didn't say banana" knock-knock joke.

Stone Ball

A landscaper in East Hampton reported to police that a large grante stone ball had been pushed down a hill in the middle of the night. The ball is valued at $1.00 and landed in a wooded area across the street. Police are on the lookout for a guy that is obsessed with the movie Fightclub or for a giant man that is upset about the rumor the bowling alley is closing down.

Report

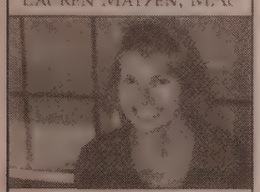

A woman in East Hampton reported to police that somebody walked into her house and left the kitchen light on and the sliding glass door unlocked. There were no signs of forced entry. The woman just wants to let the intruder know that next time, you better #@$@#% turn the lights out and lock the door.

Announcing a new summer grant program for East End nature and wildlife preserves and conservancies

If your nonprofit organization is looking for summer funding for projects promoting coastal biodiversity, preserving the integrity of the natural ecosystem, or protecting endangered species, submit your application now to 2007grant@rarewildflower.org (deadline June 30, 2007).

The Brine Family Trust is seeking grant proposals from East End Long Island nonprofits for programs devoted to nature and wildlife conservancy. The Trust will fund projects that serve to reclaim and maintain the natural ecosystems of East End's ocean habitats, bays, beaches and flats, estuaries, streams, creeks, shorelines, and tidal wetlands. 2007 grant awards range from $4,000 to $29,000.

East End Long Island summer support 2007 grant award levels

Organizations applying for an award are encouraged to apply for the cash grant award level justified by the project's requirements. Five grants will be awarded: $29,000, $18,000, $11,000, $7,000, and $4,000. Only seek funds for projects that can reasonably be completed in 2007–2008. Grants are awarded based on need. Allocation of administrative overhead is limited to 7 percent of project budget.

Some of the East End's endangered or at-risk species

The Fin Whale There are approximately 200–400 fin whales in the waters of New York. The fin whale is the most abundant large baleen whale in the Long Island region. They are the second largest species of whale and the second largest animal ever to have lived. An endangered species since the inception of the U.S. Endangered Species Act of 1970, the fin whales face a high risk of extinction in the wild. Photo: A. H. Kopelman for CRESLI

The Roseate Tern The East End of Long Island has one of the two largest roseate tern colonies in the Western Hemisphere. The colony located at Great Gull Island off eastern Long Island has more than 1,000 pairs. Photo: National Audubon Society

The Sandplain Gerardia The sandplain gerardia, the only federally endangered plant species in New York State is an extremely rare wildflower that only blooms for a day with pink or purple flowers. Long Island has six of the ten world populations of the sandplain gerardia in the coastal grassland areas. Photo: Eleanor Saulys, CT Botanical Society

Grant recipients guidelines

Grants will be awarded to operating charitable foundations, preserves, conservancies and trusts with a history of achieving results on the East End of Long Island. To qualify for a grant the nonprofit is required to be a recognized 501(c)(3), established over three years ago, with a 2006 budget of $200,000 or more.

Grant-making cycle

The grant-making cycle is streamlined to provide funds for 2007 projects. To apply for a grant on behalf of your organization, follow the guidelines established below and e-mail us at 2007grant@rarewildflower.org. Please note, due to our staff size, we are unable to receive requests for proposals by post, or inquires by phone.
